Ordinarily, however, the fact that the execution, or the judgment on which it has been issued, has been paid or satisfied, does not entitle defendant to an injunction,⁵¹ except where complicated questions of law or fact arise which can only be properly presented and tried on appropriate pleadings,⁵² or where the execution is being fraudulently used to oppress defendant.⁵³

Partial satisfaction. Where a judgment has been partially paid but execution is issued for the full amount, an injunction will lie restraining the sale of the entire property for the whole amount of the judgment debt;⁵⁴ but an injunction will not issue to restrain the collection of that part of the judgment debt which remains unpaid.⁵⁵

is willing to satisfy the judgment in toto, and tenders an amount sufficient to discharge the same, which is refused,⁵⁶ or where the money is in the hands of the clerk, who refuses to apply the same,⁵⁷ an injunction should be granted to restrain the enforcement of the execution; but the court will refuse to interfere where the tender is not kept good.⁵⁸ Where the tender is made to a person not authorized to receive payment, and it does not appear that the debtor made any effort to find the creditor, injunction should be refused.⁵⁹

j. Void Judgment or Writ

As a general rule the fact that the execution or judgment is void will not justify enjoining an execution levy or sale.

It is generally held that an injunction will not lie to restrain an execution levy or sale where the execution is void,⁶⁰ or where the execution was issued on a void judgment,⁶¹ since there is an ade-

Agreement as to judgment

Where it was sought to enjoin collection of an execution on ground that attorney by whom agreement for entry of judgment had been made had never been employed by and did not represent defendant, but the evidence showed not only that attorney admittedly employed by defendant consented thereto, and that attorney who made agreement was employed by defendant, interlocutory injunction was properly denied, in absence of evidence that defendant had restricted attorney's authority by prohibiting the making of such an agreement.—Reece v. McCormack, 4 S.E.2d 575, 188 Ga. 665.

Statutory finality of judgment, barring appeal, does not authorize an injunction to restrain the issuance of, or to correct, an execution.

quate remedy at law⁶² by such proceedings as stay,⁶³ motion to quash,⁶⁴ affidavit of illegality,⁶⁵ an action for malicious abuse of process and attorneys' fees and costs,⁶⁶ or by appeal or writ of error.⁶⁷

Cases are not wanting, however, in which injunction has been held a proper remedy,⁶⁸ at least, where the proof requisite to establish the fact that a judgment is void rests outside of the record.⁶⁹ Where a judgment is vacated, it has been held that injunction lies to restrain execution thereon.⁷⁰ While it has been held that where there is no judgment whatever on which to base an execution an injunction will not be granted,⁷¹ there are contrary decisions.⁷²

k. Miscellaneous Grounds

Injunctions against a levy or sale under execution have been granted or refused on certain other grounds in addition to the various grounds already discussed.

In addition to the grounds discussed supra this section warranting the issuance of an injunction, other grounds may be sufficient to justify injunctive relief.⁷³ Thus, for example, an injunction may issue to prevent the issuance of an execution in behalf of one not entitled to an execution.⁷⁴

An injunction will be refused where demanded on grounds which existed before the rendition of the judgment or which might have been discovered by ordinary diligence by complainant.⁷⁵ Hard times, preventing a fair purchase price,⁷⁶ or the motives of the judgment creditor,⁷⁷ or any hardship or misfortune from which complainant may suffer,⁷⁸ or the fact that a sale by receivers would be better for all the creditors of a cor-

Judgment of appellate court

Where an appeal in a civil suit is taken from a justice of the peace to a court having no jurisdiction and that court renders a judgment for plaintiff, neither the failure of defendant to object, nor even the consent of both parties, could give the court authority to enter a judgment, and execution on such a void judgment may be enjoined.—Monterey & New Columbus Turnp. Husband's withdrawal of wife's answer

(1) Injunction will not lie to restrain execution on a judgment against a married woman in an action on her promissory note because of alleged fact that her husband, in collusion with plaintiff in the action, withdrew her answer in such action where the answer, admitting the indebtedness but denying that the note was secured by deed, set up no defense to the action, and the wife, through ignorance, failed to set up the valid defense that a married woman cannot bind herself as security for her husband.—Dunson v. First Nat. Bank, 164 S.E. 815, 175 Ga. 79.

(2) Likewise, the fact that by the withdrawal she was deprived of her right to set up the valid defense by amendment is no ground for enjoining the execution, where no such amendment was filed.—Dunson v. First Nat. Bank, supra.

poration,⁷⁹ or the existence of cross demands,⁸⁰ or an agreement by a third person with the execution debtor to pay the debt,⁸¹ or the fact that the execution creditor is an insolvent nonresident,⁸² is not a ground for injunction. A sale of an oil painting valued at several thousand dollars will not be enjoined because there is no market for such property except in another state.⁸³ Since enforcement of the writ does not imply an entry on the premises of the judgment debtor, see supra § 101, an injunction cannot be predicated on the assumption of a continuing or other trespass.⁸⁴ A consent judgment agreed to by judgment creditors in another action relating to the property does not authorize the granting of an injunction against a sale and execution under a judgment not involved in the consent judgment.⁸⁵

Assignment of judgment. The fact that the judgment debtor was not notified of an assignment of the judgment is not sufficient to justify an injunction.⁸⁶

Pending other proceedings. Where a trial of the right of property levied on is pending, an injunction is proper to stay proceedings on other executions issued on the same judgment and levied on the same property.⁸⁷ Where the judgment debtor has a claim against the judgment creditor which he must assert in a separate action and not by way of set-off or recoupment and the judgment creditor is insolvent, a temporary injunction may issue restraining the sale under execution pending the determination of the separate suit.⁸⁸ Where an accounting between a guardian and a ward is necessary, pending such accounting a temporary injunction may issue to restrain the enforcement of a judgment against the sureties on the guardian's bond.⁸⁹ Injunction lies to restrain a levy and sale of the interest of a tenant in common pending a partition of the property to ascertain his share and to have a homestead set off.⁹⁰ Where an appeal acts as a supersedeas, a sale under the writ will be enjoined,⁹¹ but not where the statute provides for the execution of certain judgments notwithstanding an appeal.⁹² A temporary injunction may issue pending an appeal from the decree granting an injunction.⁹³

Equity which follows the law will not enjoin judgment creditors from pressing their executions, until the applicant for homestead exemption can have the property set apart for the benefit of another creditor, no matter how just the claim of that creditor may be,⁹⁴ nor will execution be enjoined because the execution debtor claims a homestead in the land.⁹⁵ The mere pendency of an application for receivership as to a corporate judgment debtor does not authorize a temporary injunction restraining the sale under execution of corporate assets.⁹⁶ A party has no right to enjoin the execution of a judgment absolute and unconditional in its terms, as to the matter it professes to decide, during a litigation as to other matters in controversy reserved by the judgment.⁹⁷ A fortiori, this cannot be done in respect of matters reserved which have not yet been brought into litigation.⁹⁸ Where a deceased husband's lands are set apart for the support of the widow and minor children, subject to the debts of the estate, and subsequently creditors obtain judgment against the estate, a sale of the lands under execution will not be enjoined pending the setting apart of property for further support on the theory that the first award was void.⁹⁹

Whether the pendency of garnishment proceedings against the execution debtor will authorize an injunction against levy or sale under execution is discussed in the C.J.S. title Garnishment § 190, also 28 C.J. p 267 notes 94, 95, p 268 note 4 [c], and 23 C.J. p 561 note 22—p 562 note 25.

A release of the levy pending the suit authorizes a denial of the injunction.¹

§ 153. — Procedure in General

Whether an injunction against a levy or sale under execution should be sought by independent suit or by motion in the original action is governed by the practice in the particular jurisdiction.

While it has been said that an injunction against an execution is not a new suit but a part of the original action,² the suit cannot be treated as a motion in the original action, if it is not so entitled, and the only relief prayed for is a perpetual injunction.³ In some states, one not a party to the judgment may apply by petition for injunctive relief in the original action and need not bring an independent action in equity,⁴ but in other states he cannot intervene in the action at law to which he is not a party.⁵

A suit by a third person to enjoin a sale on execution is one to remove a cloud from the title, rather than a suit to quiet title.⁶

Equity has general jurisdiction to enjoin an execution sale. The injunction should be sought in the court having jurisdiction of the subject matter. Objections to jurisdiction or venue must be timely raised.

Equity has general jurisdiction to enjoin a sale under a levy of execution to satisfy a judgment.⁷ A bill to enjoin a levy or sale under execution may be brought in any court having jurisdiction of the subject matter.⁸ Thus a court rendering the judgment has jurisdiction to restrain the issuance of execution thereon pending other proceedings.⁹ A court having no jurisdiction to try certain issues cannot issue an injunction based on such matters.¹⁰

While it has been held that a bill may be filed in the courts of one state to enjoin proceedings on a judgment recovered on a judgment rendered in the court of another state where the original judgment has been reversed,¹¹ as discussed in Courts § 500, one court cannot control the process of another court and, therefore, as a general rule, cannot enjoin the enforcement of a judgment, or the levy of an execution issued on the judgment of another tribunal. Whether a state court may enjoin execution from a federal court is discussed in Courts § 542, and whether a federal court will enjoin execution from a state court is discussed in § 543 of the same title.

Venue. The venue of a suit to enjoin a levy or sale under execution, as dependent on general principles or venue statutes generally, is discussed in the C.J.S. title Venue § 38, also 23 C.J. p 570 notes 35-38. Original jurisdiction

The original jurisdiction conferred by constitutions in certain courts includes power to restrain executions in proper cases.—Frank v. Currie, La.App., 172 So. 843.

Statutory jurisdiction

Where by statute specified courts are given jurisdiction of all suits and proceedings arising out of the provisions of law governing banks, such courts have jurisdiction of suits by the banking commissioner who has closed a bank to enjoin execution against the bank by a judgment creditor.—Attorney General ex rel. State Banking Com'r v. Hyde, 251 N.W. 570, 265 Mich. 383.

suits to enjoin a levy or sale under execution, as is shown in the C.J.S. title Venue § 95, also 67 C.J. p 105 note 58 [d] (2) and 23 C.J. p 570 note 41. The levy of an execution and advertisement of land for sale are not "pending proceedings" within the meaning of statutes discussed in the C.J.S. title Injunctions § 170, also 32 C.J. p 292 notes 71-75, specifying that suits for injunctions to stay proceedings at law may be brought in the county in which the proceedings are pending.¹²

Objections. The objection to the jurisdiction in equity should be made before answering to the merits, or defendant will generally be considered to have waived the defense.¹³ Objections to venue are likewise waived by failure to raise them at the proper time.¹⁴

§ 155. — Time to Sue and Limitations

A complainant seeking an injunction against a levy or sale under execution must be diligent. In some jurisdictions statutes of limitation control.

Injunction will not ordinarily issue until a levy is actually made¹⁵ or at least until plaintiff threatens to enforce his judgment.¹⁶

The party asking an injunction must be diligent,¹⁷ although, where the judgment is void, he need not act until an attempt is made to enforce it.¹⁸

Statutory limitations may govern,¹⁹ but they have been held in some states not to apply to a suit by one not a party to the judgment,²⁰ to a suit to enjoin for causes which have arisen since the rendition of the judgment,²¹ to a suit for injunction which is auxiliary to a direct suit in equity to set aside the judgment,²² or to suits relating to invalid judgments.²³

Where by statute a court may issue an injunction in a pending action only, after final judgment an injunction against an execution may not be granted.²⁴ The fact that an instrument attached to the petition shows a bar of prescription on its face does not indicate that it is in fact prescribed as regards the right to a preliminary injunction restraining the sale of property seized.²⁵

Notice to the officer levying the execution and an offer to do equity have been held conditions precedent to obtaining an injunction against a levy or sale under execution. An injunction bond is usually, but not always, required.

Notice to the officer making the levy, so as to permit him to abandon the levy, is sometimes held a condition precedent to a suit for an injunction.²⁶

Offering to do equity. The maxim that he who seeks equity must first do equity applies to an applicant for an injunction against an execution.²⁷ Where complainant has made absolute conveyances of land to secure the debt on which judgment was obtained, in order to have execution restrained he must pay or tender the money due on the secured debt.²⁸ Where it is admitted that the judgment is valid and payable as to part of its amount, the amount admitted to be due must be tendered as a condition to the right to an injunction.²⁹

Bond or security. In some jurisdictions statutory provisions requiring an injunction bond when a judgment at law has been obtained have been construed to require such bond in injunction suits to restrain a levy or sale under execution.³⁰ Further, under express statutory regulation, a bond is required of a party asking an injunction against an execution, particularly in the case of a preliminary or temporary injunction.³¹ Likewise, a bond may be required by the injunction decree.³² The amount depends on the terms of the various statutory provisions.³³ As a general rule an injunction issued without a bond or deposit, where necessary, may be set aside;³⁴ but there are cases where equity will issue an injunction without the filing of a bond by complainant.³⁵

Liability on bond see infra § 164.

Purpose of bond

Injunction bond, in action to enjoin execution, is taken in lieu of deposit of money with master as was the English practice.—Phillips v. Landess, supra.

Judgment entered by confession on a bond with warrant of attorney is within the provisions of the statute, requiring defendant to give security before the issuing of an injunction to stay proceedings at law in any personal action after verdict or judgment.—Marlatt v. Perrine, 17 N.J.Eq. 49.

Injunction as incidental relief

(1) Where an injunction is sought as incidental relief, the statutory requirement as to an injunction bond is inapplicable.—Jaffe v. Hooper, 247 Ill.App. 449.

(2) In such case the bond need not be conditioned for the payment of the judgment.—Jaffe v. Hooper, supra.

Judgment for mortgage deficiency

The statutory proceeding for recovery of a mortgage deficiency is not a personal action within the meaning of a statute requiring security before the issuance of an injunction to stay proceedings at law in any personal action, so that the statutory bond is not required in a suit to enjoin execution on such judgment.—Meranus v. Lawyers' & Homemakers' Building & Loan Ass'n, 174 A. 150, 116 N.J.Eq. 402, reversed on other grounds 180 A. 665, 118 N.J.Eq. 586.

In New York

(1) Code Civ.Proc. § 613, required applicant for an injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment to pay the full amount of the judgment, including interest and costs, into court, or give an undertaking in lieu thereof and also to give an undertaking to pay to the party enjoined all damages and costs in the action wherein the injunction is granted.—New York, etc., Tel. Co. v. Rosenthal, 112 N.Y.S. 612, 128 App.Div. 220.

(2) A similar provision is contained in Civ.Pract. Act § 886.—Deichmiller v. Grindle, 225 N.Y.S. 171, 130 Misc. 752.

23 C.J. p 569 note 29.

Effect of bond

Bond prevents a "waiver" of damages for seizure.—Herndon v. Cocke, supra.

32. Ky.—Pell v. Lander, 8 B.Mon. 554.

33. Iowa.—Hardin v. White, 16 N.W. 580, 19 N.W. 822, 63 Iowa 633.
23 C.J. p 569 note 30.

In Tennessee

(1) Even though Shannon Code § 6257 provides that the penalty of an injunction bond to enjoin a money demand after judgment shall be in double the judgment or sum sought to be enjoined, such provision was not intended to deprive the court of his inherent right to fix the penalty of the bond.—Phillips v. Landess, 280 S.W. 694, 152 Tenn. 682.

(2) Hence, where the court fixed the penalty of an injunction bond in a suit to restrain levy or sale under execution at less than double the money judgment, a bond conditioned on such penalty substantially conforms to the statutory requirement.—Phillips v. Landess, supra.

In Texas

(1) Rev.St. art. 4650, providing that, where the injunction is to restrain the execution of a money judgment or the collection of a debt, the injunction bond shall be fixed in double the amount of such judgment or debt requires the amount of the bond to be fixed in the order for the injunction, and is essential to directing the issuance of the writ.—Sanders v. Bledsoe, Civ.App., 178 S.W. 539.

(2) This provision is inapplicable to an injunction to restrain a sale under execution of real estate, and in such case the court may fix bond in such amount as seems appropriate under the facts of the case.—Pacheco v. Allala, Civ.App., 261 S.W. 148.

(3) Moreover, even if the statute should be deemed applicable to injunction suits against execution sales of real estate, it has no application to cases where the judgment on which the execution is based is not against the owner of the land seeking the relief.—Pacheco v. Allala, supra.

23 C.J. p 569 note 31.

Injunction void or voidable

Stay of execution is voidable on motion to vacate, and not void, where security is filed as required by statute.—Deichmiller v. Grindle, 225 N.Y.S. 171, 130 Misc. 752.

In Louisiana

(1) Under Code of Practice art 739 eight grounds for injunction against levy or sale under execution exist as to which complainant need not give a bond.—Marine Bank & Trust Co. v. Shafer, 92 So. 353, 151 La. 831—23 C.J. p 569 note 32 [c] (1), (2).

(2) Thus an allegation that consideration of mortgage note has failed authorizes injunction without bond under the provision that the debtor can arrest the sale of the thing seized if the debt be extinguished by transaction, novation, or in some other legal manner.—United Motor Co. v. Drumm, 1 La.App. 762.

(3) Likewise, under art. 741, defendant in executory proceedings may obtain a writ of injunction without bond on allegation that debt has been paid or that recovery of the debt is barred by prescription.—Platt v. Bouanchaud, 75 So. 91, 141 La. 391.

(4) Under arts 739, 740, only defendant in executory proceedings can arrest the sale by an injunction without bond.—O'Reilly v. Pietri, 64 So. 922, 135 La. 1.

(5) This statutory enumeration of grounds on which an injunction may

§ 157. — Persons Entitled to Sue, Parties, and Notice

- a. In general
- b. Parties plaintiff
- c. Parties defendant
- d. Notice

a. In General

All parties to the judgment must be made parties to a suit to enjoin the execution for fraud.

The rule that in suits to annul judgments upon the ground of fraud all parties to the judgment, whether favorably or adversely affected by the judgment, must be made parties applies to suits to enjoin execution upon such judgment for fraud.³⁶

A person who has no title or interest in the property to be sold or who would not be injured is not entitled to maintain a suit to enjoin a levy or sale under execution.

A person who has no title or interest in the property to be sold cannot enjoin the execution against the property.³⁷ No person, whether or not a party, may sue if he would not be injured by the execution sale.³⁸ Ordinarily a mere lienholder cannot sue.³⁹ A party cannot in his representative capacity enjoin the sale of his individual property.⁴⁰

However, the owner of the land levied on, although not a party to the judgment, may sue for an injunction.⁴¹ A third person having a prior interest in the property levied on is ordinarily authorized to sue.⁴² Thus the vendor who has conveyed land with covenants of warranty may sue where the sale would create a cloud on the purchaser's title.⁴³ In some jurisdictions purchasers whose property has been seized for the payment of the purchase price are by statute entitled to have the sale enjoined.⁴⁴

Trust property. Where trust property has been levied on, the trustee is the proper party to ask for an injunction;⁴⁵ if he neglects or refuses to act, or if he has resigned and his successor has not been appointed, the cestui que trust may take measures to protect the estate,⁴⁶ but some necessity for an injunction must appear.⁴⁷ issue without bond applies to executory process in its true sense as defined by the code.—Marine Bank & Trust Co. v. Shaffer, 92 So. 353, 151 La. 831.

(6) Art 739 is not intended to prevent the issuance of injunctions with bonds as to causes other than those specified.—T. Hofman-Olsen v. Northern Lumber Mfg. Co., 107 So. 593, 160 La. 839.

Injunction suit by state defendant is not entitled to sue to enjoin execution against surety's property, without showing that he had any interest therein.—Holden v. Ryan, Tex.Civ.App., 268 S.W. 1022.

Plaintiff, as taxpayer and producer of oil, is without such special interest in sale of four hundred fifty thousand barrels of crude oil under execution in another county as would entitle him to maintain suit to enjoin sale on ground that sale would reduce price of crude oil and injure him as a taxpayer and oil producer.—*Railroad Commission v. Subsequent execution creditor. Where a judgment creditor is proceeding by execution to raise the full amount of his judgment, when that amount is not due, but has been reduced by payments or otherwise, a subsequent execution creditor has a right to an injunction to restrain the prior creditor from selling under his execution until the payments are ascertained, and the creditor gives credit for them.⁴⁸

Joinder. Persons who have no common interest or whose causes of action did not arise out of the same transaction cannot be joined as parties plaintiff.⁴⁹ On the other hand, all persons having an interest in the subject matter which can be affected by the decree may join as parties plaintiff.⁵⁰ Where complainant's equity is a mere incident to the equity of another it must be set up through or under the other and therefore the other is a necessary party plaintiff.⁵¹ Where one of several joint judgment debtors sues to restrain the enforcement of the judgment against himself alone, he need not join the others as parties plaintiff.⁵² The fact that a judgment debtor, whose right to injunctive relief is barred by his appeal from the judgment, joins with creditors as complainants does not bar granting injunctive relief to such creditors.⁵³

c. Parties Defendant

- (1) In general
- (2) Officers

(1) In General

Persons materially interested in the subject matter of a suit to enjoin execution are necessary parties defendant while persons having no interest need not be made defendants.

All persons materially interested in the subject matter of a suit to enjoin execution are necessary parties defendant.⁵⁴ Conversely persons having no interest therein need not be made defendants.⁵⁵ Plaintiff in execution is a proper,⁵⁶ and usually a necessary,⁵⁷ party, but it has been held that he is not a necessary party, his interest being sufficiently represented by the sheriff.⁵⁸ The attorney who obtained the judgment for plaintiff is not a proper party except in case of fraud.⁵⁹ Where complainant is a person other than the judgment debtor, the judgment debtor is a necessary or proper party.⁶⁰ In a suit to enjoin execution on a judgment on a delivery bond the surety of the bond should be made a party.⁶¹

Judgment debtor and mortgagees

If several execution creditors have levied on the property, all may be joined as defendants,⁶² but separate defendants acting in different capacities on different rights and not chargeable with any joint liability or interests in the relief sought cannot be joined,⁶³ except where no inconvenience will thereby be occasioned to defendants, and no complications will arise.⁶⁴

(2) Officers

The decisions are conflicting as to whether the officer holding the execution is a proper or necessary party defendant to a suit for injunctive relief against the execution. Except where injunction is sought against the sovereignty, a clerk of court is not a proper party defendant.

It is quite usual to make the officer who holds the execution a party to a suit for injunctive relief against the execution,⁶⁵ and he has been held to be a necessary party.⁶⁶ On the other hand, it has been held in some jurisdictions that he is not a necessary party,⁶⁷ and in some that he is not even a proper party;⁶⁸ a decree against plaintiff in the execution as sole defendant would be as effectual as though the officer having the process had been made a party and included in the decree.⁶⁹

The clerk, being a mere minister of the law and having no interest in the suit, is not ordinarily a proper party.⁷⁰ However, in a suit to enjoin execution under a judgment in favor of the state, the clerk,⁷¹ the state's attorney and the county attorney,⁷² and other interested persons⁷³ are properly made parties defendant, since the state cannot be sued.⁷⁴

A levy or sale under execution will not be enjoined in the absence of notice to the defendant.

Generally an injunction to restrain an execution levy or sale cannot be granted without notice to defendant,⁷⁵ but notice to counsel for the judgment creditor has been held sufficient.⁷⁶

23 C.J. p 573 note 94.

Clear right to injunctive relief, based on an unquestionable, or reasonably clear, equity, must be stated, where the execution sale is un-vague or uncertain,⁷⁹ or contain inconsistent allegations.⁸⁰ The facts and not the conclusions or opinions of the pleader must be stated.⁸¹ Defenses need not be anticipated.⁸² Allegations of the answer may cure the defects of the bill.⁸³

Allegations which are necessarily implied need not be specifically set out.⁸⁴ Thus where it is alleged that there was no judgment, or that complainant was not served with summons, it is not necessary to allege that complainant did not owe the debt.⁸⁵ Where a sale, under execution, is sought to be enjoined as a cloud on title it is sufficient to allege facts which show that the sale

would cast a cloud on complainant's title,⁸⁶ and it is not necessary to allege that plaintiff is in possession of the premises.⁸⁷

Where defects in proceedings are relied on, they must be specifically alleged.⁸⁸ If a statute fixes the time for an injunction suit at one year except under certain circumstances, and the suit is brought after the year, the complaint must clearly bring the case within the statute.⁸⁹

Construction against pleader. The pleading will be construed against the pleader,⁹⁰ particularly where the injunction is sought on purely technical grounds.⁹¹

der a valid judgment and execution.—Kearley v. Crawford, 151 So. 293, 112 Fla. 43.

Equitable set-off

A petition for an injunction against a sale under execution on a money judgment in a bail trover suit, hinting that the judgment creditor breached a forthcoming bond by electing to take a money judgment, fails to state a cause of action for an equitable set-off when the amount of damages for the alleged breach of the forthcoming bond is not alleged.—Shepard v. Veal, 173 S.E. 644, 178 Ga. 535.

Points not appearing from bare documents must be set forth in a petition for a preliminary injunction against a public seizure and sale under execution.—McCrory v. Harp, D. C. La., 31 F.Supp. 354.

Excessive levy

Execution against realty could not be enjoined as excessive where defendant in execution did not point out personality to the officer or show that realty was divisible.—Dyar v. Mobley, 152 S.E. 74, 170 Ga. 65.

(1) It must be alleged not merely that the officer has an execution in his hands, but that he is threatening and preparing to levy such execution on the property of plaintiff, and that unless he is restrained therefrom, he will immediately levy on and sell plaintiff's property.—Elson v. O'Dowd, 40 Ind. 300.

(2) Moreover, in the absence of some allegation that a writ duly issued and placed in the hands of an officer is not authorized by law, or violates some legal or equitable right of complainant, or that the officer has done some act in excess of powers conferred, an injunction is unauthorized.—Gatt v. Hurlburt, 284 P. 172, 131 Or. 554, rehearing denied 286 P. 151, 133 Or. 415.

(3) Mere allegation that the officer threatens to do unauthorized act where nothing has been done is insufficient to warrant an injunction.—Gatt v. Hurlburt, supra.

Where dates are essential to the cause of action, a demurrer will be sustained on account of their being left blank.—Knightstown First Nat. Bank v. Deitch, 83 Ind. 131.

Petition construed

In judgment debtor's suit to enjoin sale of land under execution on ground that debtor held legal title to land in trust for coplaintiffs, language in petition respecting intention

Description of property. A description in the bill of the property levied on has been held necessary,⁹² and attaching to the complaint an exhibit containing such description is insufficient.⁹³

Dispensing with bond. Under statutes dispensing with a bond by complainant where injunction is sought on specified grounds, discussed supra § 156, in order to justify an injunction without bond it is necessary that the bill contain a sworn allegation of the existence of one or more of the grounds specified by the statute.⁹⁴ Where both specified and unspecified grounds are alleged, and no bond is furnished, the injunction will issue only on the statutory grounds.⁹⁵

Negating facts. To show his equity it is sometimes necessary for complainant to negative the existence of certain facts,⁹⁶ particularly where there is a question of jurisdiction⁹⁷ or of notice to an adverse party.⁹⁸

Offering equity. Under the maxim that he who asks for equity must first offer to do equity, complainant must make his offer in the bill to do equity or must show that he has already done equity.⁹⁹

Pleading defense not available at trial. A bill which discloses matters which would, if proved, have established a good defense to the original action, does not show equity if no reason is given why the defense was not interposed in the original action, or why complainant has not resorted to the legal remedies afforded him.¹

Prayer for relief. A general prayer for relief is insufficient.² However, the petition need not contain an express prayer for the particular kind of injunction sought, if from the context of the bill the particular injunction desired may be ascertained.³ Plaintiff may demand that the judgment or debt be decreed satisfied, and, in the alternative, that the judgment be decreed void because rendered without proper citation.⁴

(2) Want or Inadequacy of Remedy at Law

In the bill to restrain an execution, the absence or exhaustion of a remedy at law, or a satisfactory reason of parties to a deed could not be construed as alleging that a trust provision was expressed in such deed—W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Cowan, Tex Civ.App., 152 S.W.2d 796.

93. Ind.—Armstrong v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 30 N.E. 695, 130 Ind. 508.

Reason for rule

The practice of attaching exhibits to complaints is at best confined to writings, or copies thereof, on which the complaint is founded, but the use of a so-called exhibit to cure an essential averment omitted from the complaint is unauthorized—Armstrong v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, supra.

94. La.—Marine Bank & Trust Co. v. Shaffer, 92 So. 353, 151 La. 831. 23 C.J. p 569 note 32 [c] (1).

Sufficiency of allegations

(1) An injunction without bond will not be granted where the bill contains allegations of grounds not specified by statute for the issuance of injunction without bond.—Marine Bank & Trust Co. v. Shaffer, supra.

(2) Thus, allegations in a bill to arrest the execution of an ordinary judgment recognizing a mortgage under an act importing a confession of judgment that the debt had been paid before judgment, or that the judgment was rendered without citation and without issue joined by answer or otherwise will not authorize an injunction without bond.—Marine Bank & Trust Co. v. Shaffer, supra.

Particular facts

(1) Where complainant alleges that the judgment creditor has released the judgment for a valuable consideration, it must also be alleged that at the time of the release the judgment creditor had title to the judgment and had not assigned or conveyed it to any other person.—Holden v. Ryan, Tex.Civ.App., 268 S.W. 1022.

(2) A railroad company cannot enjoin an execution on its locomotives where it does not allege that execution was not issued on a valid judgment, or for a just debt, or inability to pay.—Midland R. Co. v. Stevenson, 29 N.E. 385, 130 Ind. 97—23 C.J. p 572 note 66.

Sufficiency of prayer

3. Tex.—Wilkenfeld v. Ballard, Civ. App., 84 S.W.2d 279.

4. La.—McInnis v. Wingata, 70 So. 610, 138 La. 682.

for not utilizing an adequate remedy at law, must be averred. Irreparable injury need not be expressly alleged where facts showing such injury appear.

Generally the bill or complaint for injunctive relief against an execution is defective where it does not show that plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law,⁵ or that he has exhausted his legal remedies,⁶ or some satisfactory reason for failing to seek a legal remedy.⁷

Irreparable injury need not be expressly averred if the facts showing such injury are alleged,⁸ or where a different degree of injury is required by statute.⁹ If the facts showing inadequacy of the remedy at law are otherwise alleged, the insolvency of defendant need not be alleged.¹⁰

(3) Property of Third Persons

A third person seeking to enjoin a sale of property levied on as the property of the judgment debtor must allege facts showing his title or interest.

If property of complainant has been levied on as the property of the judgment debtor, complainant in his bill to enjoin the sale must show his title to the property or his interest therein,¹¹ so that the court may determine whether he would be injured by a sale thereof,¹² except in the case of a complainant who as a defendant in replevin has given a forthcoming bond.¹³ If he claims as a bona fide purchaser from the judgment debtor he must show the facts as to the purchase which evidence a prior equity,¹⁴ although it need not be alleged that complainant was a purchaser in good faith or for value.¹⁵

A substantial averment of ownership is sufficient if the averment is not met by an exception calling for greater particularity of statement.¹⁶

(4) Attack on Judgment

As a general rule, in suits to restrain execution a meritorious defense must be pleaded where the judgment itself is attacked.

In suits to enjoin execution allegations as to errors of law in the trial resulting in the judgment on which the execution is based are ordinarily to be disregarded.¹⁷ While as a general rule a meritori-

Fraud inducing dismissal of affidavit of illegality

A petition alleging that defendant's fraud induced petitioner to dismiss an affidavit of illegality is insufficient where facts sufficient to show such fraud are not alleged.—Felker v. Still, 169 S.E. 896, 177 Ga. 163.

ous defense must be pleaded where the judgment itself is attacked,¹⁸ yet if the judgment is attacked as void it has been held that plaintiff need not plead a meritorious defense,¹⁹ although in some states a defense or some equity must be set up,²⁰ unless the invalidity appears on the face of the record.²¹

(5) Refusal to Levy on Property Pointed Out

A bill seeking an injunction on the ground of refusal of the officer to levy on property pointed out to him must contain allegations that the property was pointed out, that complainant had unencumbered title thereto, that it was tendered to the officer, and allegations negating defenses.

If the ground for injunction relied on is the refusal of the officer to levy on other property pointed out to him, the bill or petition must specify the property on which the levy should be made,²² and contain allegations that complainant had title thereto,²³ and that it was tendered to the officer.²⁴ Complainant must also specifically allege that the property so pointed out was clear of encumbrances,²⁵ and negative similar defenses.²⁶

Acceptance of payment in merchandise

Where complainant relies on payment of the judgment as the ground for enjoining a sale under execution, an allegation of payment by merchandise without an allegation that the creditor agreed to accept such merchandise as payment on the judgment is insufficient.—Garner v. Powell, 278 P. 625, 137 Okl. 8.

Judgment on replevy bond

Petition for injunction against execution of judgment on replevy bond, alleging that property was delivered to plaintiff in original action and to sheriff and sold by them, and alleging facts invalidating sale, is not demurrable, where the facts showed a "delivery" within the statute providing for discharge of judgment by delivery of replevined property.—Weaver v. O'Banion, Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 288.

Allegations held sufficient

(1) Complaint alleging that the demand sued on was liquidated by the execution of a note and mortgage sufficiently alleges a defense of payment.—Sledge-Norfleet Co. v. Matkins, 243 S.W. 289, 154 Ark. 509.

Assumption is that additional payment, alleged to have been made, was made in connection with other dealings between the parties.—Frank v. Costigan, 118 A. 144, 141 Md. 106.

(6) Satisfaction of Debt

Where satisfaction of the debt or tender is relied on as a ground for enjoining an execution sale, the facts must be alleged.

If the ground relied on for injunctive relief against an execution sale is the satisfaction of the debt,²⁷ or part payment,²⁸ the facts must be stated. If a tender of the whole amount or the amount unpaid is relied on, the tender must be properly pleaded.²⁹

b. Subsequent Pleadings

In suits to enjoin execution all parties defendant need not answer. The answer must allege the facts relied on as a defense, and if the answer pleads in the alternative each alternative must constitute a complete and sufficient defense.

In suits to enjoin an execution, it is not always necessary for every party defendant to answer,³⁰ and the failure of the officer to answer does not preclude the judgment creditor from asserting his rights.³¹

The answer must state the facts relied on as a defense.³² Where the answer pleads in the alter-

Adequacy of remedy at law

(1) The mere fact that the legal remedy appears from the face of the bill to be adequate does not deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction to consider the case, it being necessary that defendant in his answer aver the adequacy of the remedy at law.—Hartsema v. Addison Coal & Coke Co., 282 N.W. 155, 286 Mich. 296.

(2) An answer merely denying that equity affords a remedy, without expressly averring the adequacy of the legal remedy, is insufficient.—Hartsema v. Addison Coal & Coke Co., supra.

Fraud

(1) Where complainant seeks to enjoin an execution sale as the real owner of the property, an answer alleging that complainant's title is fraudulent must state facts showing the fraud.—Reaves v. Meredith, 48 S.E. 199, 120 Ga. 727—23 C.J. p 576 note 49.

native, each alternative pleaded must be a complete and sufficient ground of defense.³³

On a general demurrer to the bill, matters not appearing on the face of the bill cannot be considered.³⁴

Reconvention. In a suit to enjoin an execution on the ground that the judgment has become dormant, defendant may plead the judgment in reconvention.³⁵

c. Exhibits

In suits to restrain execution, neither the execution nor collateral papers are required as exhibits.

In suits to restrain execution, the execution need not be made an exhibit³⁶ nor need collateral papers.³⁷

d. Verification

General rules governing the verification of pleadings in injunction suits ordinarily control in suits to enjoin an execution levy or sale.

General rules governing the verification of pleadings in suits for injunctions ordinarily apply in suits to restrain an execution levy or sale.³⁸ The bill, complaint, or petition, seeking final relief, need not be under oath.³⁹ The only effect of want of verification is that complainant is not entitled to a temporary injunction, and defendant is not entitled to dissolution of the injunction during the pendency of the proceeding.⁴⁰ On the other hand, a petition for a temporary injunction must be under oath.⁴¹

The same rules control as to the necessity of a verified answer.⁴²

e. Issues, Proof, and Variance

General rules governing issues, proof, and variance usually apply in suits to enjoin an execution levy or sale.

General rules relating to issues, proof, and variance ordinarily apply in suits to restrain an execution levy or sale.⁴³ Only the grounds for injunction set forth in the complaint can be relied on,⁴⁴ and defenses other than those set up in the answer cannot be urged.⁴⁵ If the answer sets up that the deed to plaintiff was fraudulent, the fraudulent character of the deed is an issue without a reply.⁴⁶ Defendant need not prove the existence of a judgment where the complaint proceeded on the theory that there was a judgment and an execution.⁴⁷

The capacity of sheriff duly commissioned cannot be inquired into,⁴⁸ nor can matters at issue and adjudicated in the original suit be reopened on the ground of newly discovered evidence.⁴⁹

Complainant who seeks to enjoin a levy or sale under execution has the burden of proof, but the burden of

(2) Other cases see 23 C.J. p 576 note 57 [a].

Lack of notice of prior conveyance

An execution creditor must allege, as against debtor's purchaser, that at the time he acquired his lien on property which the judgment debtor had previously conveyed to third persons he had no notice of such conveyance.—Sears v. Cain, 47 S.W.2d 513, 242 Ky. 702.

Quashing of execution return

Where the bill alleges that a previous execution on the same bond had been satisfied, an answer alleging that the previous execution and return had been quashed, but failing to show that the execution debtor was before the court or notified of the motion to quash, fails to state a good defense.—Lock v. Slusher, 43 S.W. 471, 102 Ky. 415.

Waiver of irregularities

An answer which shows that the irregularities which are the ground of the injunction sought were waived by agreement is sufficient.—Egbert v. Mercer, 66 Ind. 305.

Issue of title in purchaser

In suit to enjoin execution sale of certain realty, debtor's interest in which was allegedly sold to plaintiff by parol sale, evidence that judgment debtor sold interest in land to plaintiff reserving one half mineral right, and that plaintiff paid him a certain sum for interest and entered on the land and improved it, built fences, and other structures, was sufficient to raise issue of title in plaintiff under parol sale.—Wyatt v. evidence may shift to defendant. Presumptions will be indulged in as in other actions, subject to being rebutted. General rules ordinarily govern as to the admissibility and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence.

General rules of evidence ordinarily are applicable in suits to enjoin an execution levy or sale.⁵⁰

Presumptions will be indulged in as in other actions,⁵¹ but they may be overcome by testimony.⁵² Every presumption must be indulged in favor of the regularity of the judgment attacked.⁵³

The burden of proof is on complainant,⁵⁴ but the burden of evidence may be shifted to defendant.⁵⁵ In some jurisdictions, plaintiff, where he attacks the judgment, must prove that he had a valid defense to the cause of action on which the judgment was based.⁵⁶

Admissibility. The admissibility of evidence ordinarily is governed by the rules relating to the admissibility of evidence in other equitable proceedings.⁵⁷ Deeds which are a link in the chain of title are admissible.⁵⁸ If the ground for injunction is excessiveness of the levy, evidence of the value of plaintiff's equity in the land above encumbrances is not admissible.⁵⁹

Weight and sufficiency. A complainant who seeks an injunction against a levy or sale under execution must present a strong case.⁶⁰ The principles discussed in Equity § 479, and in the C.J.S. title Injunctions § 192, also 32 C.J. p 349 note 55-p 352 note 88, ordinarily govern the sufficiency of evidence,⁶¹ such as evidence of satisfaction of the judgment,⁶² or the inadequacy of the price paid for realty.⁶³ In jurisdictions in which complainant must show a meritorious defense to the judgment in order to be entitled to an injunction, it is sufficient if a prima facie meritorious defense is established.⁶⁴ Where a third person complainant asks an injunction against an execution on his

(4) Complainant, claiming as purchaser of property seized under ex-

If the application for the injunction is grounded on fraud the fraud if denied must be clearly proved,⁶⁶ and fraud as a defense against an injunction must likewise be clearly proved.⁶⁷

Pleadings as evidence. Where the allegations of the bill are traversed by the answer, injunction should not be granted,⁶⁸ and, as stated infra § 160, if a temporary injunction has been granted, it will be dissolved. However, where the answer to a petition for an interlocutory injunction admits the illegality of the intended sale, the injunction will be granted.⁶⁹

§ 160. — Hearing, Determination, and Relief

- a. Hearing and determination
- b. Relief

a. Hearing and Determination

In some jurisdictions a temporary injunction against a levy or sale under execution may be granted only after a hearing on a rule nisi; in other jurisdictions such injunction may be granted ex parte. Where the injunction is sought because of a defective judgment, the court will consider the character and force of the judgment so far as is necessary to dispose of the application.

(1) In view of Act 1924 p 39, a temporary injunction enjoining a sale under execution cannot be granted until after a hearing on a rule nisi, although a temporary restraining order may issue ex parte in the meantime.—American Nat. Bank v. Bauman, 137 So. 54, 173 La. 336.

(2) The act has been construed to modify the statutory provisions governing the issuance of injunction against proceedings by executory process.—American Nat. Bank v. Bauman, supra.

Temporary injunction against execution of judgment rendered by county court, which had jurisdiction of parties and subject matter of suit, against sureties on mortgagor's replevy bond for reduction in value of mortgaged automobile because of abuse or injury while in mortgagor's hands after it was replevied and

Under some statutes a temporary injunction against the levy or sale under execution can be granted only after a hearing on a rule nisi;⁷⁰ in other jurisdictions it may, within the discretion of the court, be granted ex parte, as where otherwise irreparable injury to the applicant would result.⁷¹ Under some statutes the suit must be heard by the court rendering the judgment,⁷² but the statutes are inapplicable where execution is levied on property of a person not a party to the judgment.⁷³

Where an injunction is sought against a sale under execution because based on an alleged defective judgment, the court will consider and ascertain the true character and force of the judgment, not necessarily for the purpose of declaring the judgment void, but in order to ascertain the equitable circumstances in the case in order to dispose of the application for injunction.⁷⁴ Questions relating to persons not parties to the suit cannot be determined.⁷⁵

Findings must be supported by the evidence,⁷⁶ and must be sufficient to authorize the decree.⁷⁷

b. Relief

A court taking jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin a levy or sale under execution will determine all the issues between the parties, but generally will not award relief beyond the necessities of the case. Dismissal of the bill bond executed, by reason of statute should have been made returnable to such court.—Baum v. Dunbar, Tex. Civ.App., 90 S.W.2d 643, error dismissed.

may be ordered, and an injunction which has been granted may be continued or dissolved.

Where the court once takes jurisdiction of a suit to restrain an execution levy or sale, it may proceed to determine all the issues between the parties,⁷⁸ but it will not, as a general rule, grant any relief beyond the necessities of the case.⁷⁹ In a proper case a temporary injunction may be granted.⁸⁰

The sale should not be enjoined where the object of the bill will be answered by restraining the payment over of the proceeds of the sale.⁸¹ A decree perpetually enjoining a sale is improper where the proper relief is merely to enjoin a sale under a venditioni exponas.⁸² If the execution issues for more than is due, an injunction should be sustained only as to the excess.⁸³

The court may, in a proper case, prohibit a sale of a particular interest in property.⁸⁴ Under some circumstances, the decree should not enjoin all further proceedings on the judgment but should limit the injunction to the particular property levied on.⁸⁵ An injunction will not issue because of alleged satisfaction of the judgment debt where the evidence shows that complainant, in proceedings to amend the judgment, has admitted that there was no payment of the debt.⁸⁶ While a court of equity has no power to order a new trial of the case at law,⁸⁷ it may decree that unless the opposite party submits to a new trial of the case in which the judgment and execution was rendered and ordered the levy of execution will be enjoined.⁸⁸

Under some circumstances, defects in the original judgment may be corrected,⁸⁹ but in a suit to enjoin collection of a paid judgment errors in the judgment cannot be corrected,⁹⁰ and on application for a temporary injunction a final decree correcting an error in the execution is improper.⁹¹

Relief to defendant. Where defendant seeks affirmative relief in his pleadings, such relief may be awarded.⁹³ Moreover, on granting relief to plaintiff, the court may properly grant to defendant the relief to which he is entitled, although he does not pray therefor.⁹⁴ Where, under the circumstances, a cross bill would have been a mere formality, a decree rendered as if a cross bill had been filed, is proper.⁹⁵

Dismissal and nonsuit. The bill may be dismissed in a proper case.⁹⁶ Thus, when there is no equity in the bill, it should be dismissed and the injunction dissolved;⁹⁷ but it is not proper to decree a sale under the execution.⁹⁸

Where the bill is not devoid of equity on its face and the case has not been set down for hearing on bill and answer and has not been at issue long enough to justify a trial, it is error to dismiss the bill.⁹⁹ Where by statute the resort to the wrong kind of remedy is not ground for dismissal, a failure to proceed at law where there is a complete and adequate remedy at law is not ground for dismissal.¹ Of course, where plaintiff makes out a prima facie case, a nonsuit should be denied.²

Where a petition is filed in the original action instead of bringing an independent suit in equity, it is not ground for dismissal that it was addressed to the judge instead of to the court or that it prayed for a judgment instead of an order.³

Continuance of injunction. Where proper grounds exist, a temporary injunction may be continued.⁴

Dissolution of injunction. A temporary injunction may be dissolved in a proper case,⁵ as where it has accomplished its purpose,⁶ or where the bill is not timely filed,⁷ or the writ of injunction has not been timely served,⁸ or where the injunction was granted on the allegation of nullity of the judgment on which the execution issued, and the action of nullity is barred by prescription.⁹

Where the allegations of the bill are traversed by the answer, a temporary injunction which has been granted may be dissolved,¹⁰ but it has been held that dissolution does not follow as a matter of course in such case.¹¹ Where the answer raises issues properly triable at law, the injunction will be dissolved.¹² Where the answer by its admissions shows that equity remains with the complainant after all the allegations have been taken as true the injunction will not be dissolved.¹³ An injunction will not be entirely dissolved for error when a modification will better serve the ends of justice.¹⁴ A legislator's privilege does not prevent a court from acting on a motion to dissolve an injunction in his favor to stay proceedings.¹⁵ An injunction against a provisional seizure is null if it does not reach the sheriff until after seizure, and may be dissolved on motion.¹⁶ An injunction will not be dissolved on giving bond where the dissolution will work irreparable injury to complainant.¹⁷

Whether dissolution will be granted rests in the discretion of the court.¹⁸ The judgment or order of dissolution need not contain the reasons therefor.¹⁹ A statute providing that when an injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment is dissolved the decree of dissolution shall include the amount of principal, interest, damages and costs, including officer's fees and commissions due on the judgment at the date of dissolution and an award of execution against the defendant in the judgment, has been held not to apply when strangers to the judgment obtain the injunction.²⁰

As a general rule the dissolution of the injunction restores the parties to the same position which they occupied before it was granted.²¹ If the injunction is dissolved during the life of the execution, the sheriff may proceed to sell without making a second levy,²² but if it is not dissolved until after the return day of the execution, he should return the execution, detailing the facts in his return.²³ However, in jurisdictions where the lien created by the levy is released by the injunction, stated infra § 163, it is not restored by dissolution thereof, and it is necessary for the creditor to sue out a new fieri facias and not a *venditioni exponas*²⁴ which, if issued, is void and the proceedings thereunder may be quashed on motion.²⁵

In Mississippi

(1) Code, 1906, § 623, Hemingway Code § 383, provides for the recovery of damages at the rate of five per cent of the amount found due, including the costs, on the dissolution, in part, of an injunction obtained to stay proceedings on a judgment at law for money.—Courtney v. John Deer Plow Co., 84 So. 185, 122 Miss. 232.

(2) The decree should be limited

§ 161. — Successive Applications

A second application to enjoin a levy or sale under execution is permissible where it appears that there is new matter not existing at the time of the first application or that existing matter was not then known to complainant.

If complainant brings a second bill for injunctive relief against an execution levy or sale, he must show that the new matter alleged did not exist at the time the first bill was filed or that, if it existed, it was unknown to him.²⁶

§ 162. — Damages and Costs

Damages, interest, costs, or attorney's fees may in a proper case, and usually as a result of statutory regulation, be allowed on the dissolution or modification of an injunction restraining execution.

Statutes in some jurisdictions authorize an assessment of damages in the injunction suit on dissolution or modification of the injunction, under certain circumstances.²⁷ In some states statutes expressly provide for a certain per cent damages where the judge is satisfied that the injunction was obtained only for delay.²⁸ However, the allowance of damages has been held to be in the discretion of to the dissolution and the award of a personal decree on the injunction bond for such damages as defendant may have sustained, and it is error to award a personal decree against the obligors on the injunction bond for the amount of the judgment or debt sought to be enjoined.—Gotelli v. Fountain, 90 So. 250, 127 Miss. 577.

Punitive character

Statutory damages allowable to defendant on dissolution of injunction against enforcement of judgment are punitive in character.—Brantley v. Pruitt, 144 So. 604, 175 La. 879.

Limitation to execution on money judgments

(1) In some jurisdictions the right to damages in the injunction suit is limited to cases where a money judgment execution is enjoined.—Brantley v. Pruitt, supra.

(2) However, dissolution of injunction against sale of specific property seized under execution on money judgment is within the limitation.—Brantley v. Pruitt, supra.

the court, reviewable only in case of clear abuse,²⁹ but an excessive allowance of damages may be reduced.³⁰ If plaintiff in execution has not been delayed in the collection of his judgment,³¹ or if the injunction was against the collection of the amount out of a particular piece of property without any restraint of satisfaction elsewhere,³² the execution creditor is not entitled to damages on dissolution of the injunction. So, if the property levied on was never legally seized, the owner of the property cannot recover damages.³³ If no injunction has been granted, and none dissolved, statutory damages are not recoverable.³⁴

If a third person attempts to enjoin an execution against his property instead of pursuing his remedy at law, the only damages which plaintiff in execution can recover are in reconvention for the wrongful suing out of the injunction.³⁵ A third person claimant is not subject to damages resulting from a delay because of a temporary restraining order allowed to expire by limitation where the expiration was due to the pendency of a rule for a temporary injunction based on the same grounds on which the restraining order was issued.³⁶

injunction is subsequently dissolved, the court may, in the injunction suit, assess damages against both the principal and the surety on the injunction bond, discussed in the C.J.S. title Injunctions § 289, also 32 C.J. p 445 note 62, have been held applicable where an injunction against a levy or sale under execution is dissolved.³⁷ If an execution on a forthcoming bond against the principal and surety has been enjoined at the instance of the principal alone, the surety is not liable for the damages incurred by the principal for retarding the execution.³⁸ So one of several judgment debtors who does not apply with the others for an injunction should not be charged with damages.³⁹

The measure of damages for the delay caused by a temporary injunction is the amount of debt and interest lost by reason of the wrongful issuance of the injunction;⁴⁰ on a partial dissolution, the damages are allowed on the portion of the judgment for which the injunction is dissolved.⁴¹ Where a lessor obtains a preliminary injunction against the sale of the lessee's interest, on dissolution of the injunction the amount of rent obtained by the lessor from a new tenant for the unexpired term of the lease represents the value of the right seized by the judgment creditor of which he was illegally deprived by the injunction.⁴²

Under applicable statutes interest may be allowed, the amount being specified by the statutes,⁴³ and, where the statutory rate is mandatory, the court has no discretion to vary the rate.⁴⁴

The rule that, where the main suit is so blended with a temporary injunction proceeding that it is impossible to separate the two, the expenses incurred in connection with the trial of the main suit should be included as damages, stated in the C.J.S. title Injunctions § 315, also 32 C.J. p 471 note 47, applies to a suit on an injunction bond given to enjoin a levy or sale under execution.⁴⁵

Attorney's fees. In some jurisdictions attorney's fees may be allowed complainant by way of damages,⁴⁶ unless an allowance is inequitable under the particular circumstances,⁴⁷ or unless the expense is not due to the injunction, but would have been incurred in any event;⁴⁸ but such fees cannot be awarded for obtaining a dissolution of a temporary restraining order which by its terms had expired prior to the proceedings for dissolution.⁴⁹ The amount to be awarded as attorney's fees depends on the value of the property illegally seized, the damage or inconvenience that might be sustained by the debtor by reason of such seizure if it were not terminated, and the skill and labor required to secure the debtor in his rights.⁵⁰

Costs are generally awarded to defendant on granting his motion to dissolve.⁵¹ Costs are awarded against defendant where the injunction is perpetuated.⁵² Where an injunction is obtained to prevent a sale under execution for an excessive sum, costs of the injunction will be assessed against the execution creditor.⁵³ If an execution on a void money judgment is enjoined and a judgment on a claim for affirmative relief was granted complainant, the costs of the injunction suit should be taxed against defendant in injunction.⁵⁴

§ 163. — Effect of Injunction

a. In general

b. As affecting levy, custody, and lien

a. In General

The full intent of an injunction against an execution levy or sale is not confined to the letter, but may be judged from its spirit and purpose.

The full intent of an injunction against a levy or sale under execution is not necessarily confined to the letter, but may sometimes be judged from its spirit and purpose.⁵⁵ The effect of a temporary injunction is merely to preserve the existing status until a regular trial of the issues involved can be had.⁵⁶

An injunction taken out against an executory process is, regardless of form, in substance and effect a defense against the demand of the execution creditor.⁵⁷ An injunction against the issuance of an execution bars a suit against the clerk for refusal to issue it.⁵⁸

An injunction restraining the execution sale precludes a levy on the property, even though no sale is made.⁵⁹ Such an injunction prevents a sale under the levy covered thereby, even where there is a claim of improper issuance,⁶⁰ although the court may permit the sheriff to sell perishable property in his hands, and deposit the proceeds in court.⁶¹ If an officer proceeds to sell property he has levied on before the injunction, he becomes a trespasser ab initio,⁶² but, where the property is sold pending an injunction, the debtor's title is not prejudiced thereby.⁶³ A sheriff enjoined from further proceedings under a seizure should not return the writ, but retain it, to be proceeded with if unfettered.⁶⁴

If the judgment creditor and the sheriff have been restrained from executing the original fieri facias, an alias cannot be issued.⁶⁵ However, enjoining the execution of the original judgment does not affect an execution issued on a forfeited forthcoming bond taken on the execution on the original judgment.⁶⁶

b. As Affecting Levy, Custody, and Lien

In some jurisdictions an injunction against a sale under execution releases the levy and the lien thereunder, although in others the injunction merely suspends the levy but does not release it.

There is considerable conflict in the decisions as to the effect of the injunction as a release of the execution lien.⁶⁷

In several jurisdictions while the effect of an injunction on the execution lien is said to be dependent on the character of the bond required,⁶⁸ it is held that an injunction releases the levy and the lien created by it,⁶⁹ even though the injunction is wrongfully issued,⁷⁰ and, where the property levied on is personal property, its return to the debtor is authorized,⁷¹ although it has been held that the issuance of an injunction does not destroy the officer's right to retain possession,⁷² or interfere with the right again to levy on and sell property after dismissal of the injunction proceedings.⁷³ The rule is said to be otherwise in the case of a levy on land, which is not perishable, and where the debtor's possession is not divested by the levy.⁷⁴ A further distinction is drawn between an injunction sued out at the instance of the execution debtor and one procured by a stranger; in the latter case the lien is not destroyed, even though an injunction bond is given,⁷⁵ at least where only a nominal bond to indemnify for costs and damages was required;⁷⁶ but this distinction has been repudiated.⁷⁷ In other jurisdictions it is held that the injunction merely suspends the lien and does not release it.⁷⁸

If the injunction is made perpetual, the lien is lost.⁷⁹ In order that the time during which an injunction operates shall not be considered in the reckoning of the limitation of a judgment lien on land, the injunction must be against the enforcement of the judgment itself, and not an injunction restraining the sale of a tract of land claimed by a third person.⁸⁰

Levy of junior writ. If an elder execution is enjoined, the sheriff should go ahead and levy a junior which he has in his office.⁸¹ The proceeds cannot be applied to the elder execution,⁸² and the rule is said to be the same, although the injunction is dissolved by a consent order after the sale and before the return of the process,⁸³ which is protected by security given when the injunction was obtained,⁸⁴ although, where notice of the consent to the dissolution was given the sheriff before the sale, the elder execution is entitled to be first paid out of the proceeds.⁸⁵

The extent of liability of the obligors on an injunction bond to stay execution depends on statute and the terms of the bond. Liability may be enforced by action on the bond or, in some jurisdictions, by summary proceedings.

Injunction bonds are construed so as to accomplish the purpose for which they are designed, namely, to protect defendant from any wrongful interference with his rights, and to reimburse him for all damages and costs incurred by reason of an injunction improperly issued.⁸⁶ The extent of liability depends on the statutes and terms of the bond.⁸⁷ Where the statute prescribes the condition of a bond, the surety will not be liable beyond the statutory requirements, although the conditions may be broader and express.⁸⁸ If an injunction is granted to restrain the sale of property levied on, in order that plaintiff may have the benefit of its value if found entitled to it, the obligors on the bond are liable only for the costs and damages occasioned by enjoining the sale.⁸⁹ The liability would be otherwise where the entire debt has been enjoined on a ground which, if sustained, would give full relief, although the injunction is also in part to enjoin the sale of property levied on by execution.⁹⁰

Where an injunction bond is valid,⁹¹ and liability thereon has accrued,⁹² a recovery may be had thereon, either by action or, where permitted by statute, by summary proceedings.⁹³ However, a bond is not statutory, or summarily enforceable, unless it contains, in substance, the very conditions required by the statute for the particular case.⁹⁴

VII. CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS

A. IN GENERAL

§ 165. Intervention in Original Action

In the absence of authorizing statute, it is commonly, although not always, held that a stranger to an action in which execution has issued cannot intervene in the action to claim property levied on.

In the absence of statute authorizing such procedure, it is commonly held that a third person, not a party to the action in which execution has issued, cannot intervene in the original action to claim property levied on under such execution.⁹⁵ However, in some instances an interpleader or intervention has been allowed;⁹⁶ and in Louisiana statutory provision is made for the intervention in an action by way of a third opposition by one not originally a party thereto who claims an interest in property seized on execution in the action.⁹⁷

§ 166. Statutory Trial of Right of Property

The statutes in the various jurisdictions commonly provide a mode by which the rights of claimants of property taken under execution may be tried and the title to such property ascertained. The nature and form of the remedy provided by these statutes and the procedure thereunder are considered infra §§ 169-195.

§ 167. Motion

Except where allowed by statute, a third party claimant may not proceed by motion for relief against an execution.

Unless so provided by statute,⁹⁸ motion is not a proper remedy by which to procure the delivery to claimant, or to prevent the sale, of property seized under execution,⁹⁹ although a rule will lie to compel an officer to comply with the requirements of law with reference to the return of the execution and claim papers.¹ A motion or other proceeding to stay, quash, or vacate the execution will not lie in favor of a claimant to the property levied on.²

§ 168. Action by Claimant

Since the summary statutory remedy of a third party claimant is not exclusive, he may elect to bring a common-law or equitable action. Giving notice of claim to the levying officer is generally a condition precedent to such an action, and the sufficiency of the notice depends on the governing statute.

As stated infra § 169, the summary statutory remedy of trial of right of property does not preclude a resort to a common-law action or suit in equity, except where claimant has elected his remedy. As appears in the C.J.S. title Sheriffs and Constables § 147, also 57 C.J. p 941 note 87-p 943 note 33, a claimant of personal property levied on may bring trespass or trover; as appears in the C.J.S. title Replevin §§ 28, 29, also 54 C.J. p 428 note 84-p 429 note 6, an action of replevin may also be allowed; and an action of detinue has been held to lie.³ Claimant may elect between replevin and an action against the officer for conversion.⁴ Under indemnity statutes, a mere lienor may lose his right to pursue property sold under execution where the execution creditor has given a statutory indemnity bond.⁵ In Pennsylvania, a judgment creditor alleging his debtor's interest in real estate may proceed with the execution, and, if there be any question as to title, it may be raised and determined afterward in an action of ejectment.⁶

Notice as condition precedent. As a prerequisite to the prosecution by a third person of a claim to property taken in execution, he is very generally required to give written notice of his claim to the officer levying the execution.⁷ No notice, however, is required where the property levied on was, at the time of the levy, in the possession of claimant himself;⁸ and it is held that a married woman need not give notice of her claim to property levied on as that of her husband.⁹ A sworn petition in replevin cannot take the place of notice.¹⁰ Notice to a deputy who makes the levy is generally sufficient;¹¹ but notice may be served on the sheriff, even though the levy was made by a deputy.¹²

The purpose of such notice is to enable the officer to secure an indemnifying bond; and it is not for the benefit of the execution creditor;¹³ and claimant is not estopped by any recitals in the notice.¹⁴

The sufficiency of the notice generally depends on the terms of the governing statute.¹⁵ The officer cannot waive defects in the notice of claim, as against the execution creditor.¹⁶ If the notice of ownership is merely to enable the officer to secure a proper indemnifying bond, all defects in form or substance are waived where that purpose is accomplished.¹⁷ The giving of an indemnifying bond to the officer waives objections to the sufficiency of a notice of claim.¹⁸

Notice need not be given prior to levy; it is sufficient if it is given while the property or funds are still in the hands of the levying officer.¹⁹ Receipt of notice may be shown by a notation on the back thereof,²⁰ or by the admission of the officer when testifying.²¹

Demand. In an administrator's action to set aside judgments against deceased and to enjoin a sheriff's sale of property, it was held not error to award possession of the property to interveners claiming under assignment from deceased, although no demand had been made on the judgment creditor for possession before action was instituted.²² The necessity and sufficiency of a demand on the officer before claimant brings suit are considered in the C.J. S. title Sheriffs and Constables § 68, also 57 C.J. p 831 note 4—p 832 note 26.

B. STATUTORY PROCEEDINGS TO ESTABLISH CLAIMS

§ 169. Nature and Form

- a. In general
- b. Sheriff's interpleader
- c. Sheriff's jury

a. In General

Statutory proceedings providing for the trial of claims of third persons to property levied on under execution are usually summary in their nature, sometimes being confined to personality, and cumulative to remedies by which claimant may assert his title either at common law or in equity.

In some jurisdictions, under governing statutes, a trial of the right to property levied on under execution, where claimed by third persons, is provided for.²³ Proceedings under these statutes are regarded as special²⁴ or supplementary²⁵ proceedings, and ordinarily summary in their nature,²⁶ and they may be ancillary and in aid of the remedy afforded by the writ of execution²⁷ or may be in the nature of a separate and independent suit,²⁸ or of an equitable proceeding.²⁹ The object of such statutes is to give to the claimant of property seized under process of law a summary method of asserting his title or right of possession, without a resort to an

Effect on other remedies. The remedy given by such a statute is cumulative merely, and does not take from the claimant his right to assert title either at common law³¹ or in equity.³² Where, however, an election of remedy has once been made, the claimant will be bound thereby.³³ In cases where the statutory remedy is inapplicable, the claimant is necessarily remitted to such other remedies as the law affords.³⁴

In a proper case the aid of equity may be invoked by the execution creditor as well as by the claimant;³⁵ but while a claimant may file equitable proceedings in aid of his claim, and may make such allegations therein as he deems necessary to show that in equity his claim of title is superior to the judgment levied on the property claimed,³⁶ he should not be allowed to stop the trial of a claim case in order to foreclose a mortgage and thereby obtain a judgment which would be superior to the judgment levied on the land.³⁷ Where a plaintiff in execution must litigate the same question with each of several claimants, and afterward the claimants must seek an adjustment among themselves, a court of equity may, on petition of one claimant against all other claimants, adjust all the controversies in one proceeding;³⁸ but a court of equity will not interpose for the purpose of consolidating a claim case involving particular property with another controversy between the same parties relative to the proceeds arising from the sale of other property under an execution.³⁹

Property to which statute applicable. In some states it is held that the statutory remedy applies only to personal property,⁴⁰ but another statute has been held to apply to both personalty and realty.⁴¹

Status of parties. Under some statutes the execution creditor is regarded as the plaintiff and the claimant as the defendant.⁴²

Retroactive operation of statutes. A statutory remedy has been held not retroactive.⁴³

b. Sheriff's Interpleader

In the absence of statutory authorization, authorities differ as to whether an officer may interplead adverse claimants to property levied on under execution. Under Pennsylvania statutes, the sheriff or claimant may apply for a rule for an interpleader, on the return of which the court makes a preliminary inquiry into the good faith of the claims; if a case appears to be clearly within the statute, an issue is a matter of right, but otherwise the court may in its discretion deny an issue; where an issue is granted the subsequent procedure should conform to the statutes and rules of court.

In the absence of statutory authorization, it has been held that the officer cannot, by bill of interpleader, compel adverse claimants to litigate the title in a suit between themselves;⁴⁴ but other authority opposes this view.⁴⁵

is by interpleader whereby, on claim being made, the sheriff or claimant may apply to the court for a rule on the interested parties to appear before the court, contest their respective rights, and abide the further order of the court.⁴⁶ Such statutes were originated for the relief of the sheriff and similar officers,⁴⁷ and when the sheriff complies with their requirements, he is relieved of liability;⁴⁸ but the interests of other parties are protected also.⁴⁹ These statutes differ from the claim statutes in other jurisdictions in that the initiative may be taken by the officer.⁵⁰ It is not imperative on him to ask an issue, and in clear cases he should not demand it,⁵¹ unless the statute in force at the time is deemed to be mandatory on him, and to require him to ask an issue in all cases where he has notice that goods which have been levied on by him belong to any person other than defendant in the writ.⁵² Actual levy is not necessary.⁵³

On the petition for a rule, a full inventory of the property should be made by the officer and annexed to the petition with the claimant's affidavit.⁵⁴ An appraisal ordered by the sheriff and made without notice either to the claimant or to the execution creditor will be set aside;⁵⁵ but if a party to be affected by such appraisal has been given the opportunity to be present when the valuation is to be made, and is either then heard or does not appear, it will be set aside only for fraud, misconduct, or some kindred cause.⁵⁶

Unqualified and absolute ownership of the property has been required, in a sheriff's interpleader, in order to dispute the title of the defendant in the execution as against an execution creditor.⁵⁷ It has been held that an interpleader should not be awarded to try the title to a leasehold estate,⁵⁸ and that it is not ground for interpleader that the goods are mortgaged or pledged to a third person;⁵⁹ nor will an interpleader be awarded to try the title to goods acquired after the levy.⁶⁰ A tenant by the entirety has a claim cognizable in a sheriff's interpleader where property so owned has been levied on as belonging to the other tenant by the entirety, even where the other tenant is not joined in the interpleader.⁶¹

Penalty not prescribed

Where no time for filing the answer is fixed by the statute and the rules of court prescribe no penalty for failure to file it on the return day of the rule for an interpleader, the court may allow a subsequent filing unless the execution plaintiff moves to discharge the rule for an interpleader.—Lukac v. Morris, 22 Pa.Dist. & Co. 449.

Under prior statutes

form⁶³ prescribed by rules of court.

Successive interpleaders are not allowed.⁶⁴

The same principles which govern the disposition of a rule to interplead should control in disposing of a rule to intervene in an interpleader.⁶⁵

In general, the granting or refusing of an issue is largely a matter within the discretion of the court,⁶⁶ and will not be set aside except for a clear abuse;⁶⁷ but there are certain fundamental and well settled principles on which such questions should be determined.⁶⁸ Where a case is clearly within the statutes, an interpleader is a matter of right, not of grace.⁶⁹ Where the claimant files a sufficient answer and the plaintiff in the execution files a reply specifically agreeing that the interpleader be granted, the rule may be made absolute;⁷⁰ but, where two claims are in the sheriff's hands at the same time, priority of right cannot be given to one by reason of the fact that the sheriff's rule for interpleader regarding it was first made absolute.⁷¹ There should be a preliminary inquiry by the court on the return of the rule to show cause,⁷² and on this inquiry the court is not to inquire into the merits of the respective claims further than to see that they are not merely colorable or fraudulent or collusive.⁷³ If the facts are undisputed, and the inferences to be deduced therefrom clear and unconflicting, the question of title becomes one of law and is to be passed on by the court.⁷⁴ On the other hand, if the facts are disputed, the parties are entitled to an issue;⁷⁵ and if claimant's evidence is undisputed, and shows a prima facie title in him, the rule should not be discharged, but he is at least entitled to an issue.⁷⁶ If the claimant fails to produce evidence sufficient to warrant the submission of the question of his ownership to a jury, the issue should be refused, and the sheriff directed to proceed on his writ;⁷⁷ and if the execution creditor fails to produce any evidence which would be sufficient to warrant the submission to the jury of the question of the ownership of the goods by the execution debtor, or that they were fraudulently sold or disposed of, then the court is not required to submit to an abuse of its process, or to impose on the claimant the burden of a useless litigation, and may refuse an issue and order the sheriff to surrender the custody of the goods.⁷⁸ So, where the answer of the claimant sets forth a bill of sale, but fails to state whether it was delivered before or after the issuing of the execution, or whether possession was ever given, it is not an abuse of discretion to refuse an issue.⁷⁹ Either the claimant or execution creditor may have the issue framed, and the prothonotary may make docket entries thereof without any special order of the court.⁸⁰ On the rule becoming absolute, the claimant should file a statement of claim in conformity with the statute and the rules of court of the particular forum,⁸¹ even though an issue has not been framed.⁸² The execution creditor should file an affidavit of defense containing the averments required by statute.⁸³ On the failure of a party to file a sufficient statement or affidavit at the required time, his opponent may move for judgment of non prosequitur.⁸⁴

An amendment of an affidavit of claim may be permitted on the hearing of the rule, but not afterward;⁸⁵ and it has been held that, after the giving of a bond, the claimant cannot amend his statement of claim by withdrawing his claim to part of the property.⁸⁶

English and Canadian decisions under similar statutes are summarized in 23 C.J. p 584 note 27-p 585 note 70.

c. Sheriff's Jury

In some jurisdictions, the sheriff may, on claim being made, impanel a jury to determine the ownership of property levied on, even against the objection of claimant. Such proceedings are not judicial, are not conclusive on the parties, and do not, apart from statute, protect the officer in a suit by the claimant.

In some jurisdictions the sheriff, on claim being made, may impanel a jury to determine the ownership of the property levied on.⁸⁷ Such an inquiry is authorized only when there has been a taking of personal property under a writ of execution regularly issued at the suit of a plaintiff against a defendant,⁸⁸ and a claim has been interposed by a third person.⁸⁹ The sheriff need not wait, before instituting the proceeding, until a jury is demanded by claimant;⁹⁰ he may summon a jury even against the objection of claimant.⁹¹

Such proceedings, not being judicial in their nature,⁹² are never conclusive on the parties, and are at best merely a method whereby the sheriff seeks to avoid the danger of trespassing upon the property of a stranger;⁹³ generally the only effect of a verdict in favor of claimant is to require the execution creditor to furnish the officer a sufficient indemnity bond,⁹⁴ or, on failure of the creditor to give such bond, to justify the officer in delivering the property to the claimant.⁹⁵ A verdict against the claimant is no protection to the officer in a suit brought against him by the claimant,⁹⁶ except where the statute so provides.⁹⁷

§ 170. Who May Institute

A claimant must have a superior right to the property to institute a claim proceeding, and any interest which renders the property not subject to the levy or is inconsistent with the execution creditor's right to proceed in selling it will support a claim. An equitable title or right may be sufficient. The claimant need not be in possession, but must have a right thereto.

A third person claimant of property levied on under execution must be one having a superior right to the property,⁹⁸ and hence one who bought the property after it was levied on cannot resort to this remedy.⁹⁹ Claimant's title may be legal¹ or equitable.² While an uninterested person cannot interpose and maintain a statutory claim on the levy of an execution,³ it is not essential that the claimant have absolute title in order to show a basis or standing in court as claimant;⁴ any interest which renders the property not subject to the levying fieri facias, or which is inconsistent with the execution creditor's right to proceed in selling the property, will support a claim.⁵ An agent who has no interest in the property cannot interpose a claim in his own name for the purpose of protecting his principal.⁶ A mortgagee having rights prior to the judgment creditor cannot interpose a claim so as

A person who is a party to the execution cannot interpose a claim,¹⁶ and hence, where an execution is against one person "as agent for" another, it is an execution against the agent so as to preclude him from filing a claim in his own right.¹⁷ However, an execution debtor who holds title merely as trustee or agent may assert a claim on behalf of the beneficiary.¹⁸

Joint owners. Where property levied on belongs to joint owners who are not parties to the writ, one may interpose a claim to the property in his own name and rely on the joint title.¹⁹ The claimant cannot succeed where the other joint owner is the execution debtor.²⁰

Time when title existed. Want of title at the time of the interposition of the claim,²¹ although claimant had title at the time of the levy,²² has been held to preclude the right to file a claim; but under other authority a claimant in an ordinary case may sustain his claim by showing title, or a right of possession, at the time of the levy.²³

A sale of the property by the claimant pending the proceedings does not preclude the right to continue the proceedings.²⁴ If the claimant transfers his title to a third person pending the proceeding, the transfer is valid.²⁵

§ 171. Rights of Claimants in General

A claimant may under the statute be empowered to have property released from the levy by serving an affidavit of claim on the officer, unless the execution creditor furnishes a bond. A statute permitting execution on property despite a fraudulent conveyance thereof does not abrogate third persons' rights to advance their claims thereto.

Under statutory provisions it has been held that a third person claimant may have the property, or the lien created by the levying of execution, released by serving the officer with an affidavit of claim, unless the execution creditor furnishes a bond to secure the claimant,²⁶ and that a mortgagee in possession interposing a claim when the levy is not confined to the judgment debtor's equity in the property is entitled to hold the property until the execution creditor pays the mortgage debt.²⁷

A statute permitting a judgment creditor to disregard a fraudulent conveyance and levy execution on the property conveyed does not abrogate the rights of third persons to advance their claims to such property.²⁸

§ 172. Right to Interpose Title of Third Person

A claimant cannot for the purpose of protecting the property show paramount title in a third person.

the strength of his own right to the property, and not on the weakness or want of right of his adversary. Thus a claimant cannot for the purpose of protecting the property levied on, show paramount title in a third person.³¹

§ 173. Attack on Judgment or Execution

Authorities differ as to whether a claimant may attack the judgment or execution.

Under some authorities, a claimant cannot inquire into the regularity of the judgment or execution,³² but others permit him to show that it is void,³³ or that it has been quashed and set aside.³⁴ So it is held that the giving of a bond by the claimant estops him from inquiring into the validity of the levy, unless the writ is void on its face.³⁵

In Georgia, a claimant, unless he has no right to file a claim,³⁶ may show that the judgment or execution is void or invalid;³⁷ he may attack an execution for any reason which defendant in execution could urge against it at the time of the trial of the claim case;³⁸ but his rights in this respect rise no higher than those of defendant.³⁹

Objections to the jurisdiction⁴⁰ or to process⁴¹ which have been waived by the judgment debtor cannot be urged; nor can the claimant move to quash the writ or the judgment.⁴² The act of filing the claim will estop claimant from denying the sufficiency of entry of the levy.⁴³

A long delay may estop claimants to attack the judgment.⁴⁴

Where a claimant claims through a judgment rendered in another case, plaintiff may impeach that judgment and prove it fraudulent.⁴⁵

§ 174. Time for Interposing Claim

A claimant must institute the proceeding within the time, if any, prescribed by statute. A claim must be interposed before a sale or other legal disposition of the property.

Failure of defendant's prior attack on levy

Claimant to property levied on under fieri facias who acquired title from defendant in fieri facias after levy and after latter had filed affidavit of illegality in proceeding which terminated adversely to him held not entitled to prevail on proof of same grounds as presented or for causes which existed and were known or in exercise of reasonable diligence might have been known and presented in illegality proceeding.—Ryals v. Description of property

A claimant has been held entitled to begin an action to determine the right to property immediately on the levying of execution.⁴⁶ A statute may prescribe the time within which the claimant must institute the proceeding provided for,⁴⁷ and on his failure to do so the property will be conclusively presumed to be the property of the party in possession.⁴⁸ A claim is too late which is interposed after a sale or other legal disposition of the property,⁴⁹ or on appeal.⁵⁰ A premature trial of a claim will render a judgment founded thereon void,⁵¹ although the fact that a claim under a deed of trust has been interposed before, but tried after, the breach of the condition entitling the trustee to possession will not invalidate it.⁵² The mere delivery of an execution to the sheriff will not stop the running of the statute of limitations in favor of a claimant in possession; to effect this, an actual seizure is necessary.⁵³

§ 175. Affidavit of Claim

An affidavit of ownership or claim is generally required by statute in order to commence a claim proceeding, and substantial compliance with the statute regarding such affidavits is sufficient. Amendment of such affidavits has been permitted.

An affidavit of ownership or claim is generally required by statute in order to commence a statutory claim suit.⁵⁴ The affidavit is not a pleading,⁵⁵ and the source or character of title set up therein is not binding on the affiant.⁵⁶

A levying officer, receiving an affidavit of claim, may be required to return it to the proper court.⁵⁷ However, the mere tender of an affidavit does not make a claim case where the officer refuses to accept and return it;⁵⁸ and a filing with the clerk, instead of the levying officer, is insufficient.⁵⁹

Date of execution need not be stated.—Rodgers v. Murray, Tex.Civ. App., 247 S.W. 888.

Nature or basis of claim

(1) When so required by statute, the affidavit must state nature of the claim.—Hammond v. White, 108 So. 347, 214 Ala. 431—Drennen Co. Department Stores v. Brown, 103 So. 588, 212 Ala. 524—23 C.J. p 590 note 77 [c] (1).

(2) However, the failure of an affidavit to state the nature of the claim does not excuse denial of day in court if, without fault or negligence of claimant, judgment nil dicit was rendered against him.—Choctaw Bank v. Dearmon, 134 So. 648, 223 Ala. 144.

(3) One filing a claim to land levied on under a fieri facias is not required to attach an abstract of title to the land, or to show title.—Cook v. Dixon, 114 S.E. 429, 154 Ga. 373.

(4) A recital of qualified ownership has been held sufficient, although ownership was in fact absolute.—Solar v. University State Bank, 192 N.W. 292, 195 Iowa 553.

Mode of attack

Where an affidavit of claimant to property seized under execution was regular on its face and did not disclose that the officer before whom it was made was in any way interested in the purposes for which it was to be used, it could be attacked only by plea in abatement supported by proof, and could not be attacked by motion to quash.—R. Piel Gin Co. v. Independent Farmers' Gin Co. of Perry, Tex.Civ.App., 257 S.W. 830.

as in names or dates, which may be corrected by other papers in the case, are immaterial;⁶¹ but there must not be material omissions.⁶²

An unsigned affidavit, properly certified by the officer before whom it was made, is sufficient where the statute does not require signature.⁶³ Where required to be signed, an affidavit signed by a firm name is insufficient.⁶⁴

Amendment. Amendments, if germane to the issue,⁶⁵ may be allowed by the court to a notice and affidavit of claim of a third person,⁶⁶ provided, it has been held, such amendments are authorized by statute.⁶⁷ Error, however, cannot be predicated on the allowance or refusal of immaterial amendments to the affidavit.⁶⁸ The affidavit is not amendable by counsel for the claimant who refuses to make the amendment under oath.⁶⁹

Statutory provisions govern the claimant's obligation to give a bond, the parties thereto, its form and contents, and the time for giving it.

A bond may be required of claimant, under governing statutes;⁷⁰ it may be necessary to the jurisdiction of the court,⁷¹ or to prevent a sale of the property,⁷² or as security for damages from delay,⁷³ or where claimant desires to acquire or retain the immediate possession of the property.⁷⁴

Where executions in favor of different creditors are levied, it has been held that claimant should give a separate forthcoming bond in each case;⁷⁵ but under other authorities, where there are several executions, one bond is sufficient.⁷⁶ The latter rule does not apply to executions subsequently issued.⁷⁷

The bond takes the place of the goods and inures to all persons who may have a right in the goods,

Parties to bond. The claimant, if the legal owner and not claiming title under the execution debtor, is the proper person to give the statutory security.⁷⁹ The beneficial owner of the property seized has been permitted to execute a bond.⁸⁰ One of two claimants may give a bond which will authorize a trial of the right of property;⁸¹ but a bond given by one holding jointly with the execution debtor has been declared of no effect.⁸² A forthcoming bond may be required to be made payable to the execution creditor, so that it is insufficient if made to his assignee;⁸³ or it may be required to be payable to the sheriff,⁸⁴ in which case, however, such a bond payable to the creditor is enforceable

as a common-law obligation.⁸⁵ Acceptance of a bond by the officer, without objection, amounts to an approval of the sureties therein,⁸⁶ and the officer cannot thereafter erase the name of one of such sureties and substitute another, so as to relieve from liability the surety whose name was erased.⁸⁷

Form and contents. The bond must comply with the governing statute as to its terms and conditions,⁸⁸ and an officer has no power to take a bond not complying with such statute⁸⁹ or not authorized by court order.⁹⁰ Unless approval is required by statute,⁹¹ it is not necessary to have the bond approved;⁹² nor is attestation by the levying offi-

Degree of proof to negate title through defendant

The claimant need not, on application for leave to file his own bond, prove that he does not derive title through defendant by the clear and satisfactory evidence, sufficient to repel all adverse presumptions, which is required to establish his ownership at the trial.—Secretary of Banking v. Promislo, 42 Pa. Dist. & Co. 386.

Husband and wife

(1) In Pennsylvania, under the Act of June 22, 1931, P.L. 883, 12 P.S. § 2362, a married woman may file her own bond where the goods levied on are in the joint possession of the claimant wife and her husband, the judgment debtor, provided she alleges that she acquired title to the goods for herself alone and by some means other than through her husband.—Anders & Jervis Motor Co. to Use of v. Gander, 40 Pa. Dist. & Co. 459.

(2) The wife of a judgment debtor, claiming ownership of personal property levied on as his, will be permitted to file her own bond, under such statute, on oral but uncontradicted evidence that the items claimed were either given her by persons other than her husband or were purchased by her with her own money.—Secretary of Banking v. Promislo, 42 Pa. Dist. & Co. 386.

(3) Under such statute, a wife who files a property claim in execution proceedings against her husband alone, on the ground that the property levied on, which is in her possession, is owned by her and her husband as tenants by entireties, may file her own bond, since one tenant by entireties is just as much the owner of the whole as the other, and cannot be said to derive title from or through the other.—Gombka v. Kowalski, 38 Pa. Dist. & Co. 197.

(4) The word "possession", as used in such statute, providing that if goods levied on are found to be in the possession of claimant the court may under certain circumstances permit claimant to file his own bond, does not mean exclusive possession, but includes joint possession of a husband and wife.—Anders & Jervis Motor Co. to Use of v. Gander, 40 Pa. Dist. & Co. 459.

(5) However, a husband claiming property in joint possession of husband and wife has not been permitted to file his own bond.—Whiting v. Landau's, Inc., 34 Luz. Leg. Reg., Pa., 140.

cer, or other person, required.⁹³ A bond which is conditioned to deliver real as well as personal property is not enforceable as a statutory bond where the statute authorizes a trial of property only as to personal property.⁹⁴

In Pennsylvania, the security has been required to be double the amount of the debt, if the goods are worth so much, otherwise double the value of the goods.⁹⁵

The time for giving the bond is regulated by statute or governed by the practice of the particular jurisdiction.⁹⁶

Objections and amendments. The mere fact that a bond is voidable does not authorize the officer to proceed,⁹⁷ and where the bond given is merely defective it may be amended or a new bond given in its place.⁹⁸ Objections must be taken within a reasonable time.⁹⁹ Where many years have elapsed since the framing of the issue, further security will not be required.¹

Payment of costs of appraisal. Where a married woman's goods are levied on in the house in which she lives with her husband, and sold for her husband's debt, she is not required in making a claim for the goods to pay the cost of the appraisal, under a statute providing that such cost shall be paid by claimant, if the execution defendant is found in possession of the goods.²

§ 177. Effect of Pendency of Proceeding

Pending adjudication of a claim, the lien of the execution is not lost, but merely suspended; the property is still in the custody of the law, even after the claimant has given a bond, although he is entitled to the actual custody.

Pending the adjudication of a claim to property under execution, the lien of the execution is not lost; it is at most merely suspended, and the property is regarded as still in the custody of the law,³ except where the statutory period for the duration of the lien expires while such claim is being contested.⁴ The lien revives immediately on a determination adverse to claimant;⁵ if the claim is sustained, the lien of the execution is, of course, lost as to the property in dispute.⁶

The lien still attaches, and the property is still in the custody of the law, after the claimant has given a bond.⁷ The claimant who has given bond is, as a rule, entitled to the actual custody of the property,⁸ and until the trial of the issue the sheriff

has no authority to take or receive it back from him;⁹ but the giving of a delivery bond by a claimant in possession does not prevent a subsequent judgment creditor from levying on the property.¹⁰ The fact that an indemnity bond has been given by the execution creditor does not affect the claimant's right to the property, as against either such creditor or the purchaser at the execution sale.¹¹

The pendency of a claim suit does not preclude an action at law by a third person to recover the goods of claimant.¹²

§ 178. Estoppel to Assert or Deny Claim

A claimant may be estopped by his conduct to assert his claim; similarly, the execution creditor may be estopped to deny the claimant's right.

A claimant may by his conduct estop himself to assert his claim,¹³ as by representing the property to be that of defendant;¹⁴ but there is no estoppel where the acts done or omitted do not fulfill all the conditions necessary to an estoppel in pais in general.¹⁵ Likewise, under the general rules governing estoppels, an estoppel may similarly arise against the execution creditor to deny claimant's right.¹⁶

Claims of third persons to property seized on execution are commonly adjudicated in the court from which the execution issued. The court trying the claim should have jurisdiction of the amount in controversy.

The claims of third persons to property seized on execution are ordinarily adjudicated in the court from which the execution issued;¹⁷ at any rate, the court from which the execution issued has jurisdiction to determine the question whether it or some other court had jurisdiction to try the right to the property seized under the execution.¹⁸ In some states a court of a certain class has jurisdiction of all claims to property levied on regardless of whether the execution issued from that court or another court;¹⁹ in another state a court of a certain class has been held to have jurisdiction to determine claims made by a person under a mortgage or deed of trust to property taken in execution on behalf of the state or the commonwealth.²⁰ Where the levy is made in a county other than that in which the execution issued, the coordinate court of the former county has jurisdiction.²¹

The court trying the claim should have jurisdiction of the amount in controversy.²²

Under a statute or decision conferring on claimant a right to trial in the county of his domicile,²³ and providing for a change of venue thereto on his application,²⁴ it is optional with him whether the issue shall be tried in the county in which the execution issued or in the county in which the property levied on is situated and in which he resides.

All interested persons may be made parties to the claim proceedings. The claimant, the judgment creditor, and the levying officer are regarded as necessary parties, and the judgment debtor may be one also.

All persons interested in the disposition of property under execution which is claimed by a person not a party to the writ may be made parties to the claim proceedings.²⁵

A claimant is a necessary party to a claim proceeding.²⁶ Where there are two or more claimants jointly interested, all may join,²⁷ or one may prosecute the claim for the benefit of all,²⁸ except that where the property cannot be awarded to both or all claimants they are improperly joined.²⁹

A trial of right of property may be presented in the name of an infant by a prochein ami.³⁰ Property belonging to a wife and children should not be subjected to the debts of the husband and father, because the proper party has not claimed it.³¹ Where one person is substituted for another as the claimant with the consent of himself, plaintiff in execution, and the court, he cannot afterward object that the substitution was irregular.³²

The judgment creditor should always be made a party to claim proceedings.³³ The fact that the levying officer answers that the fund in his hands is claimed by another execution creditor does not of itself make that creditor a party to the proceedings.³⁴

Judgment debtor. In statutory claim cases, the execution debtor is not a party where the only issue made is the ordinary one between the execution creditor and claimant;³⁵ but the execution debtor's rights may be so involved, in a claim case, as to make him a necessary party.³⁶ He cannot be joined with the claimant as a coparty.³⁷

Death of party. On the death of the execution creditor or claimant, the proceeding must be in the name of his personal representative.³⁹ In case of the death of one of several plaintiffs, the case should proceed in the name of the survivor.⁴⁰

§ 181. Notice or Demand

Generally, timely and sufficient notice of claim proceedings must be given to all interested persons.

Generally, timely and sufficient notice of claim proceedings must be given to all interested persons.⁴¹ Where the statutory requirement is complied with, no other notice or demand is necessary.⁴² However, notice of trial is not required to be given to a claimant who has filed an affidavit of claim and bond.⁴³

The failure of a claimant of personal property levied on to give notice under a statute requiring written notice to be given a landlord that household furniture or goods have been leased, hired, or conditionally sold to a tenant, in order to exempt the goods from levy, does not affect claimant's title where levy was made after the removal of such property from the leased premises.⁴⁴

Ordinarily a claimant may withdraw his claim at any time before verdict or decision. A withdrawal terminates the case, but claimant, unless prevented by statute, may interpose another claim or pursue any other available remedy. If he obtained possession of the property by giving bond, and dismissed his claim without restoring the property, the bond remains in effect.

Ordinarily, and subject to the provisions of governing statutes, a claimant may withdraw his claim,⁴⁵ unless he has stipulated not to do so.⁴⁶ A claimant who has given a bond and obtained possession of the property cannot dismiss his claim before restoring the property to the officer;⁴⁷ if he does so, the bond is still in effect,⁴⁸ and claimant is precluded from asserting as a defense in an action on the bond that the property was not subject to the levy.⁴⁹ Under a statute allowing the claimant to withdraw or discontinue his claim once without the consent of plaintiff in execution, it has been held that a second claim cannot be withdrawn after a withdrawal of a prior claim to the same levy,⁵⁰ unless the execution creditor moves for a dismissal of the claim or consents to its withdrawal.⁵¹

The only mode of dismissing a claim at claimant's instance is by voluntary withdrawal; a motion to dismiss made by claimant and based on his own default is properly denied.⁵²

The withdrawal must be before verdict,⁵³ or before the decision, where a jury is waived,⁵⁴ and consequently cannot be made on appeal without the consent of the opposite party.⁵⁵

The effect of a withdrawal is to terminate the case;⁵⁶ but, unless a statute otherwise provides, it will not prevent the claimant from interposing another claim,⁵⁷ or from pursuing any other available remedy with reference to the property.⁵⁸

§ 183. Pleading

As a general rule, formal pleadings are unnecessary, although the jurisdictions are not in accord as to the necessity for written pleadings. Under some statutes the execution plaintiff merely alleges that the property claimed is that of the execution defendant and subject to the writ and claimant denies it; in others, where the claim is tried by an interpleader proceeding, claimant must file a concise statement of his source of title which the execution plaintiff answers. In some states affirmative defenses must be specially pleaded. Amendments may be allowed to the pleadings.

In some states, where a trial of the right of property is provided for, statutes provide for written pleadings as in civil actions,⁵⁹ and in others whether the pleadings shall be in writing or not is a question addressed to the discretion of the court;⁶⁰ but, as a general rule, formal pleadings are unnecessary,⁶¹ and in some states the statutes expressly provide that there shall not be written pleadings.⁶² The affidavit of claim which in the majority of jurisdictions claimant must make and file, considered supra § 175, is, in a number of jurisdictions, the only pleading necessary to be filed by claimant;⁶³ he need not file a complaint,⁶⁴ and no answer or other pleading is required or contemplated.⁶⁵ However, equitable rights cannot be asserted and enforced in a claim case without proper pleadings.⁶⁶ It has been held that plaintiff in execution must allege that the property claimed is the property of the execution defendant and is liable to satisfaction of the writ,⁶⁷ and that claimant simply

It is held, where the claim is tried by an interpleader proceeding, that after the rule for interpleader has issued claimant must file a concise statement of his source of title, clearly setting out the basis of his claim, which must contain all the ingredients of a complete cause of action,⁶⁹ and the execution plaintiff must file an affidavit of defense or answer, averring the grounds on which he questions claimant's title.⁷⁰ Claimant's statement of title should be filed within the time fixed by statute therefor, but such limitation as to the time for filing is not absolute, and claimant may do so, of right, at any time before the execution plaintiff has acted by way of asking for an order that the sheriff proceed with his writ or that judgment of non pros. be entered in the issue;⁷¹ and if neither party pleads in response to the sheriff's rule for interpleader they abandon their claim and consequently their right to have an issue framed.⁷²

Affirmative defenses must be specially pleaded in some states.⁷³ In others, where a claim of title is filed to property levied on, an issue of fraud in the acquirement of title by claimant may be inquired into without being specially pleaded.⁷⁴ The plea or answer may set up prescription,⁷⁵ and in some states equitable matters may be set up;⁷⁶ but a defense available at law cannot be set up as an equitable plea.⁷⁷ A general demurrer raises the question of statutory limitation.⁷⁸

Amendments. Amendments may be allowed to the pleadings within the discretion of the court,⁷⁹

Sufficiency of pleading

70. Pa.—Lettieri v. Mamaroneck Sand & Gravel Co., 186 A. 762, 123 Pa.Super. 13.

Effect of failure to answer

(1) Failure to file answer to rule for interpleader by execution plaintiff does not mean that claim has been abandoned or entitle claimant to default judgment, there being no time limit for filing such answer.—Mahoning Savings Loan Ass'n v. Cutler, 85 Pittsb.Leg.J. 649.

(2) If no answer is filed, the rule cannot be discharged except at the instance of the sheriff, as the proceedings are for his protection; and if the rule cannot be discharged, the converse is also true, and neither can it be made absolute.—L. B. Smith, Inc. v. Shellhammer, 5 Sch.Reg. 375.

An affidavit of defense in a sheriff's interpleader proceeding, which pleads that a transfer to claimants was made at a time when the transferor was obligated under a court order to pay thirty-five dollars per week to defendant wife and with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, and that claimants were a party to the fraudulent intent, is sufficient.—Rosenthal v. Rosenthal, Pa., 19 Lehigh Co.L.J. 154.

71. Pa.—American Finance Co. v. Trachtman, 157 A. 692, 103 Pa. Super. 289.

Power and discretion of court

(1) Where, in a proceeding of sheriff's interpleader, the statements of title of claimants are not filed within the statutory time of two weeks after the sheriff's or claimant's rule for an issue has been made absolute, the court of common pleas has power in the exercise of its discretion to permit them to be filed nunc pro tunc.—Suburban Bldg. Ass'n v. Furman, 35 Pa.Dist. & Co. 509, 55 Montg.Co. 147.

(2) Notwithstanding the requirement of the law that claimant's statement in a proceeding must be filed within two weeks, a court would be disposed to permit the same to be filed within a reasonable period thereafter, provided plaintiff had not moved to take advantage of the default.—McEnery v. Nahlen, Pa., 21 Erie Co. 241.

(3) The court will not permit claimants' bonds and statements of title in sheriff's interpleader to be filed where, without extenuating circumstances, claimants have permitted more than a year to elapse after the issue has been made absolute.—Suburban Bldg. Amendment held proper

Where property was devised to D, and, if he died without children, to H for life, with remainder to her children, and was levied on as property of D, and claim interposed by H and her children, an amendment to the issue tendered by plaintiff, alleging D's belief in his absolute ownership, improvements in reliance on such belief, H's promise that she and her children would quitclaim their interests, further improvements in reliance on such agreement, and the execution by H of an instrument releasing her interest to plaintiff to the extent of a loan made by plaintiff to D on the land, was held not provided they are germane to the issue,⁸⁰ are offered in due time,⁸¹ and are verified, if so required by statute.⁸² Under some statutes, either the execution creditor or claimant can amend by adding equitable matters germane to the issue;⁸³ but this rule cannot be so extended as to convert the issue in a claim case into a general action where either party may obtain a general judgment in personam.⁸⁴

§ 184. Issues and Questions Considered

In general the issue to be tried is the liability of the property to the plaintiff's execution as against claimant's title or right, and only questions relevant thereto may be considered. Formal joinder of issue is required in some states but not in others. The proof should be limited to the issues, but is more liberally admitted than in suits where there are formal pleadings and issues. A variance in the proof is fatal.

The issue to be tried under the claim statutes is an issue of the liability of the property to plaintiff's execution as against claimant's title or right,⁸⁵ at the time of the filing of the claim,⁸⁶ or, in some jurisdictions, on the trial of the right of personal property, whether the execution creditor or claimant is entitled to possession at the time of the levy of execution.⁸⁷ The issue is whether claimant owns the property,⁸⁸ which includes the manner in which he obtained such title,⁸⁹ and not whether the execution debtor owns it.⁹⁰ The court is not authorized to determine any question of lien, fraud, or equities not involved in the determination of claimant's title,⁹¹ nor to decide any issue that may arise between the executing officer and a third person.⁹² In contests between plaintiff in execution and a donee or purchaser from the execution defendant, the issue of actual or constructive fraud subject to demurrer.—Jukes v. Hull, 106 S.E. 96, 151 Ga. 156.

Dismissal of levy on part of property

On trial of claim to property on which execution had been levied, allowing sheriff to amend by dismissal of levy as to one of two tracts involved was not error, where claimant had moved to dismiss levy on ground that it was excessive and claimant was not injured by amendment.—Wright v. Pearson, 185 S.E. 336, 182 Ga. 366.

Party from whom property purchased

A motion to amend the statement of claim by substituting a different party from whom it is claimed the property was purchased should be allowed, since such an amendment does not change the nature of the claim nor introduce a new cause of action, but merely varies the proof.—Forman v. Fine, 89 Pa.Super. 329.

To assert equitable rights

Proper pleadings to assert equitable rights can be effected by amendment in aid of levy, where plaintiff in execution seeks to subject property to his process on equitable grounds, or, by amendment to the claim, where claimant sets up equitable rights against plaintiff.—Carter v. Moody, 129 S.E. 163, 160 Ga. 849.

Required purpose for amendment

Such equitable amendments must be aimed at showing a legal or equitable title in claimant, or some interest in the nature of an equitable title, to support a claim.—A. J. Evans Marketing Agency v. Federated Fruit & Vegetable Growers, 152 S.E. 49, 170 Ga. 30.

No other issue

A claim case carries with it no question save that of title.—Farrar v. Joyce, 4 S.E.2d 708, 60 Ga.App. 675.

However, it has been stated that generally in a claim case claimant may attack execution on any ground maintainable by defendant in fieri facias, and may resist levy on ground that judgment on which fieri facias issued was void.—Becker v. Truitt, 146 S.E. 654, 39 Ga.App. 286.

Matters not in issue

(1) Claim of possession by claimant.—Pitts v. Cox, 145 S.E. 61, 167 Ga. 228.

(2) The nature of the indebtedness on which the judgment was based, and for which the fieri facias was issued, whether borrowed money or not.—Blackstock v. Blackman, 108 S.E. 775, 152 Ga. 179.

(3) The liability of claimant to pay the debt on which the execution was based.—Newsome Lumber Co. v. H. N. Ramsey Motor Co., 136 S.E. 166, 36 Ga.App. 194—23 C.J. p 596 note 17 [a] (4).

may be presented.⁹³ Where claimant is the wife of the execution debtor, the question of where she got the money used in the payment of the purchase price of the property is pertinent to the issue.⁹⁴ If the validity of the affidavit is challenged, an issue is presented which must of necessity be tried by the court before the right of property can be tried.⁹⁵ Where there is but one defendant in execution and a claim affidavit recognizes that the land is levied on as the property of such defendant, claimant cannot object to the levy on the ground that it fails to show the amount of defendant's interest in the property;⁹⁶ but the rule is otherwise in cases where there are two or more defendants in feri facias.⁹⁷ In jurisdictions where pleadings are filed in the proceeding the issue is limited thereby.⁹⁸

Claimant's issue is not triable unless the execution plaintiff establishes that, as against the execution defendant, the property seized is liable to the execution.⁹⁹

Joinder of issue. In some states the making up of an issue within a prescribed time is required by statute or court rules,¹ while in other states a formal issue need not be joined.² Where a joinder of issue is required, the judgment creditor must take issue or be barred.³ The tender of an immaterial issue does not affect the validity of a judgment based on a material issue.⁴

Proof. Evidence not material to the issues in the case is inadmissible.⁵ Claimant is not bound in his proof to go beyond the issue raised by the pleadings.⁶ In jurisdictions where the execution plaintiff has the burden of proof, see infra § 185 a, the execution plaintiff must prove, prima facie at least, that the property levied on is the property of the execution defendant.⁷ Although the courts have refused to receive evidence offered by claimant or the execution creditor on the ground that it was not admissible under the affidavit of claim or under the pleadings,⁸ as a general rule they are more liberal in this respect than in an ordinary suit

93. Ala.—McDonald v. Stephens, 85 So. 746, 204 Ala. 359.

Fraudulent nature of title

(1) Defendant in third opposition, involving title to personality seized under feri facias, may tender issue vel non of fraudulent nature of third opponent's title by answer.—Southland Inv. Co. v. Michel, La.App., 149 So. 177.

(2) The fact that fraud had not been pleaded did not preclude court from determining that there had been a fraudulent conveyance of bonds by judgment debtor to third-party claimant where both sides understood issues involved and no claim was made of surprise, continuance was not requested, and no objection was made to admission of evidence tending to establish fraud.—Fulton v. Webb, 103 F.2d 596, 39 Cal.App.2d 509.

Spearman Equity Exch.*, supra.

Title in claimant's vendor

7. Ga.—Jarrard v. Mobley, 154 S.E. 251, 170 Ga. 847.

Proof required

Unless the sheriff's entry discloses that the property levied on was in execution defendant's possession, or claimant admits a prima facie case in behalf of execution plaintiff or that execution defendant was in possession, execution plaintiff must prove, as a circumstance establishing the ownership of execution defendant, that execution defendant was in possession, or in a case of husband and wife, that he and his wife both lived on the property in dispute, from which circumstance the law presumes possession and ownership to be in the husband.—Jarrard v. Mobley, 154 S.E. 251, 170 Ga. 847.

8. Ala.—Choctaw Bank v. Dearmon, 134 So. 648, 223 Ala. 144, 23 C.J. p 597 note 28.

Mortgage

(1) Failure of claim affidavit to state claim was based on mortgage as required by statute renders mortgage inadmissible as evidence over objection.—Choctaw Bank v. Dearmon, 134 So. 648, 223 Ala. 144.

(2) Under Code 1923 § 10379, on trial of right of property on which execution was levied, claimant, who made no reference in affidavit to any mortgage or nature of right claimed, could not support his claim where there are formal pleadings and issues.⁹ Evidence with respect to questions raised by the pleadings,¹⁰ such as fraud,¹¹ is admissible. Evidence tending to show that claimant had parted with his title to the property levied on is admissible.¹² Where claimant alleged ownership of the property levied on, evidence that he possessed a lien thereon is inadmissible.¹³ In jurisdictions in which the execution plaintiff alleges that the property claimed is the property of the execution defendant and subject to execution and claimant simply denies it, see supra § 183, the only means by which claimant can sustain the negative after the execution plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, is to show that he is the owner of the property;¹⁴ it is not allowable to prove that the property belongs to some third person.¹⁵

Admissions in pleadings. A party will not be heard to deny the existence of facts which he has alleged in his pleading.¹⁶ However, fact allegations in an unanswered plea cannot be considered as evidence, and proof thereof should be made to establish them.¹⁷ A replication that if there is any deed, it is not valid does not admit the execution of the deed.¹⁸

Variance. It is generally held that claimant must prove his title as claimed, or the variance will be fatal.¹⁹ Thus if absolute ownership is alleged, a recovery is not allowed on proof of a limited interest,²⁰ or proof that the property is held as security,²¹ or as agent for another;²² nor can a claim of a qualified property in the subject matter of the execution be maintained by proof of absolute property.²³ It is not a fatal variance that the proof shows an ownership of only a part of the goods on a claim to all,²⁴ or a several instead of a joint ownership as claimed,²⁵ or, on a claim to absolute ownership, an ownership in trust under which the legal title to the whole of the property is in claimant.²⁶ Also, under a prayer for general relief, claimant asserting ownership of the property, who also alleged facts showing a privilege, should receive judgment allowing the privilege where the evidence introduced establishes it.²⁷ There is a fatal variance where the proof of ownership of plaintiff is of property other than that levied on.²⁸

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In some jurisdictions the court directs which party has the burden of proof; in others claimant has the burden; and in still others, the burden depends on the possession of the property at the time of levy. As a general rule, the execution plaintiff need not prove the judgment on which the execution is based, but the authorities are not in harmony as to the necessity of proving the execution.

In some jurisdictions, the court may direct which party shall be considered plaintiff and assume the burden of proof.²⁹

Evidence held admissible

(1) Execution plaintiff may introduce evidence of every fact showing that the property is liable to the execution; and claimant may give evidence of every fact showing that there resides in him a superior right to the property.—Lehman, Durr & Co. v. Warren & Burch, supra.

(2) Where claimant relies on deed from execution defendant, evidence offered by execution plaintiff that the parties to the deed were husband and wife is admissible.—Moore v. Loganville Mercantile Co., 191 S.E. 121, 184 Ga. 351.

In other jurisdictions, the burden of proof in claim proceedings is on claimant,³⁰ who must show by clear and satisfactory evidence,³¹ or, if claimant is the wife of the execution defendant, beyond a reasonable doubt,³² that the property belongs to him and is not subject to sale on execution,³³ at least where the execution defendant had possession of the property levied on at the time of the levy.³⁴

In still other jurisdictions, if the property levied on was taken from the possession of claimant or his agent, the burden of proof is on the execution plaintiff;³⁵ but if it is taken from the possession of the execution defendant or any other person than claimant, the burden of proof is on such claimant,³⁶ and the fact that the judgment creditor is permitted to open and close does not shift the burden;³⁷ and where it is uncertain whether claimant or the execution defendant was in possession, the court should direct which party shall assume the burden of proof.³⁸

In still other jurisdictions, the burden of proof in the whole action lies on the party who would be defeated if no evidence were given on either side,³⁹

After issuance, and before levy, of execution

When a party purchases personal property of a judgment debtor after an execution has been issued and put into the hands of the sheriff against such property, but before levy, it would seem that the onus is on the purchaser to show himself to be a purchaser in good faith.—Williams v. Shelly, 37 N.Y. 375, 4 Transcr.A. 314.

Proof of possession insufficient

Delivery of possession

Where it appears that personal property which is the subject of a sheriff's interpleader had belonged to defendant in execution, and it is found by the sheriff in his apparently continuing and uninterrupted possession and use, the burden is on a person claiming through him to prove by sufficient evidence at least the constructive delivery of it.—Doll v. ecution plaintiff.—Steed v. Wren, Tex. Civ.App., 194 S.W. 963.

Property in possession of husband and wife

Where property prima facie subject to seizure

Where the officer seizes property as that of the execution defendant, which is prima facie subject to seizure, the burden of proof is on claimant.—Stone v. Hudson, 9 Ky.Op. 857.

Early case

In an early case it was held that, where the jury called on the motion of claimant of property seized under execution fail to render a verdict as to the right of the property, claimant necessarily fails to establish his right, and under the statute the officer must sell the property.—Mitchell v. Vance, 5 T.B.Mon., Ky., 528, 17 Am.D. 96.

which question the court must decide.⁴⁰ Where the execution plaintiff has the burden of proof and shows that the execution defendant had possession of the property at the time of the levy, he makes out a prima facie case and the burden of proof shifts to claimant.⁴¹

In still other jurisdictions the burden of proof, in the first instance, is on the execution plaintiff,⁴² who must show that the property levied on is that of the execution defendant,⁴³ and is liable to the satisfaction of the writ or process,⁴⁴ provided, under the express provisions of some statutes, the property levied on is, at the time of such levy, not in the possession of defendant in execution.⁴⁵ Under such proviso the burden of proof is on the execution plaintiff where claimant or his agent was in possession at the time of the levy,⁴⁶ or where the entry of levy shows that the execution defendant was not in possession at that time,⁴⁷ or where the entry of levy,⁴⁸ or the evidence,⁴⁹ fails to show that, at the time of the levy, the property was in the possession of the execution defendant, or where it does not appear who was in possession,⁵⁰ but if it appears that the execution defendant was in possession of the property at the time of the levy,⁵¹ as where the entry of levy recites that fact,⁵² or where claimant admits it,⁵³ the burden of proof is on claimant and not on the execution plaintiff.

Where he has the burden of proof, the execution plaintiff may make out his case by proving title in the execution defendant,⁵⁴ or possession since the date of the judgment.⁵⁵ He need make only a prima facie case;⁵⁶ and where he does this,⁵⁷ as where the evidence shows title in the execution defendant prior to the judgment or execution,⁵⁸ after judgment,⁵⁹ before levy,⁶⁰ or at the time of levy,⁶¹ or possession of the property by the execution defendant at the time of,⁶² or after,⁶³ or according

Plaintiff relying on judgment foreclosing loan deed carries burden of proof by showing affirmatively that defendant was vested with title at or before time plaintiff acquired his loan deed.—Moore v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 168 S.E. 48, 176 Ga. 489.

Conveyance subject to judgment and execution

Where it appears that claimant obtained title to the property levied on by conveyance subsequent to the judgment and recording of the execution, he has the burden of showing title superior to the lien of the execution, that is, that the property is not subject.—Goodwin v. Bowen, 191 S.E. 691, 184 Ga. 408.

to some authority before,⁶⁴ the rendition of the judgment, or at the time of the levy,⁶⁵ the burden shifts to claimant to show title in himself. However, where the evidence leaves it uncertain whether claimant or defendant was in possession, the burden of proof is not shifted but remains with plaintiff.⁶⁶

Claimant has the burden of proving that he had title to the property claimed on the date of the filing of his claim;⁶⁷ and where he relies for title on an alleged purchase from the execution defendant the burden of proof is on such claimant.⁶⁸

Necessity to prove judgment, execution, and levy. In some jurisdictions where claimant admits a prima facie case in the execution plaintiff and assumes the burden of proof, it is not necessary for the execution plaintiff to introduce in evidence the judgment, the fieri facias or the levy, or any evidence whatever, until such prima facie case is overcome by claimant's evidence.⁶⁹ In such case claimant must adduce evidence which so clearly overcomes the prima facie case as to require the court to set aside a verdict finding in favor of plaintiff.⁷⁰ In other jurisdictions the execution plaintiff must introduce the execution in evidence and has the burden of showing its validity;⁷¹ but if it is not challenged the presumption is that it was valid.⁷² He need not, however, except in some jurisdictions,⁷³ prove the judgment on which his execution is based.⁷⁴ In some jurisdictions the execution plaintiff must introduce in evidence, as a prerequisite to recovery, the officer's return;⁷⁵ in others the levy need not be proved, as that is admitted by the claim for the property.⁷⁶ Where the

Evidence insufficient to shift burden of proof

Introduction in evidence by plaintiff in fieri facias of execution with entry of levy, which entry recites that defendant in fieri facias died in possession of property levied on, is not evidence of fact that defendant in fieri facias died in possession of the property and will not relieve plaintiff in fieri facias of the onus probandi, and the admission of the execution and entry will not cast the burden on claimant.—*Page v. In absence of attack

It is not necessary for the sheriff and the execution creditors affirmatively to establish the integrity of the judgment on which the execution was based, unless attacked by the adverse claimant.—Schloss v. Stringer, supra.

levy is sought to be asserted against a vendee or creditor of the execution defendant, the various acts essential to a valid levy must be proved with greater strictness than when the interests of the execution defendant are in question.⁷⁷

Presumptions. Possession of the property levied on at the time of the levy by the execution defendant⁷⁸ or claimant⁷⁹ is prima facie evidence of ownership of the property by such person and raises a presumption of title in him. So a recital in the entry of the levying officer that the property levied on was in the possession of the execution defendant at the time of the levy or other evidence establishing that fact raises a presumption of the execution debtor's ownership of the property.⁸⁰

In general, unless some other issue is involved, only competent evidence relevant to the issue of the ownership of the property at the time of the levy is admissible. Deeds or other instruments indicating ownership of the property involved, including tax papers and matters relating thereto, and evidence as to claimant's purchase of the property, the consideration paid and the source from which it was obtained, are admissible, as are also the execution and return and proof of the satisfaction of the debt due the execution defendant. Evidence as to the financial condition of the parties is sometimes admissible, and also evidence showing fraud or mala fides in the transfer of the property.

Where no other issue is involved, evidence is admissible only when it has a tendency to throw light on the ownership of the property at the time of the levy.⁸¹ Such competent evidence as is relevant to this issue is admissible;⁸² and evidence which is incompetent or irrelevant should be excluded.⁸³ A deed is admissible,⁸⁴ provided it is Possession acquired by claimant's bond

Possession of claimant acquired only by filing claimant's bond and affidavit does not carry the presumption of right thereto in favor of claimant.—Moore-De Grazier Co. v. Hawley, supra.

Presumption not rebutted

Mere fact that corn crop found in husband's possession at time of levy was raised on wife's land was held insufficient to rebut presumption of husband's ownership.—Lane v. Happ Bros. Co., 162 S.E. 519, 44 Ga.App. 577.

Presumption held rebutted

(1) By uncontradicted evidence of claimant that the property levied on belonged to him.—Nolley v. Elliott, 178 S.E. 309, 50 Ga.App. 382.

(2) By uncontradicted evidence that property levied on belonged to claimant, defendant's wife, notwithstanding defendant returned such property for taxation in his own name.—Holt v. Daniel, 170 S.E. 383, 47 Ga.App. 334.

v. McKeone, 147 S.E. 711, 168 Ga. 317.

Evidence held admissible

(1) Testimony as to agreement giving judgment debtor land as advancement in full of share of estate is not objectionable as irrelevant and immaterial in proceeding to subject estate to judgment.—Home Mixture Guano Co. v. McKeone, supra.

(2) In claim proceedings involving land, claimant's testimony that claimant's mother authorized judgment debtor, claimant's brother, to convey his expected share of mother's land to claimant, and that claimant gave consideration therefor was properly admitted.—J. C. & W. C. Holman Mule Co. v. Bullard, 166 S.E. 825, 175 Ga. 900.

(3) Admission of crop mortgage given by husband was not reversible error in proceedings had on wife's claim to farm property levied on under judgment against husband.—Lanier v. Bank of Portal, 160 S.E. 550, 43 Ga.App. 828.

(4) In trial of right to property levied in the hands of a warehouse association, evidence of the purchaser of cotton tickets that he had notified the warehouse company of his purchase was admissible.—Rodgers v. Murray, Tex.Civ.App., 247 S.W. 888.

On reconventional demand against intervenor for damages

Evidence of intervenor's ownership of property, seized to satisfy judgment for one filing reconventional demand against intervenor for damages, was admissible, although intervenor had dismissed suit to enjoin sale of property.—Hersh v. Steinau, La.App., 140 So. 163.

Evidence held inadmissible

(1) Where the wife of the execution defendant claimed the merchandise levied on under a deed from him, evidence as to the amount of her stock of merchandise at the time of the trial is inadmissible, she having testified that she did not know how much stock she carried at the date of said deed, the evidence thus sought to be elicited being immaterial and irrelevant to the issue on trial.—Gill v. Willingham, supra.

(2) Where issue existed as to validity of levy on automobile, as against subsequent chattel mortgagee chargeable with notice of levy and that automobile had been left with execution defendant, evidence of previous mortgage held by mortgagee on another automobile of execution defendant was properly excluded.—Wallerbeck v. Haaven, 250 N.W. 565, 189 Minn. 604.

Former statement of execution defendant

Evidence, that defendant in fieri facias stated land belonged to him three years before crops grown on land were levied on, was irrelevant.—Jenkins v. Best Trading Co., 146 S.E. 512, 39 Ga.App. 214.

Where land was deeded long before plaintiff in fieri facias obtained judgment against grantors, and grantee deeded to P as trustee for E and her children, and subsequently P, E, and children executed deed to claimant, claimant's deed was admissible in evidence, it being sufficient to resist levy under fieri facias, even though it was not shown that children of E were not of age at time of its execution.—Wright v. Durden, 123 S.E. 701, 158 Ga. 244.

connected with the land in dispute⁸⁵ and the grantor had title,⁸⁶ but not as bearing on the question of the ownership of personalty.⁸⁷ Bills of sale,⁸⁸ or other written instruments showing the sale of the personalty involved,⁸⁹ a chattel mortgage thereon,⁹⁰ burglary and other insurance covering the goods,⁹¹ and a lease of the premises containing the same,⁹² or testimony as to the terms of an agreement under which the property was delivered to the execution defendant for a trial period,⁹³ are admissible. Where a wife claims property levied on under an execution issued against her husband, record evidence of a judgment in her favor against her husband and of the purchase of the property by the wife on an execution sale is admissible.⁹⁴ On the question whether property was originally purchased by the husband or wife, a mortgage given by the husband to secure the price is admissible.⁹⁵ Claimant who failed to take an assignment of a mortgage on the property claimed on payment of the debt secured thereby cannot introduce it in evidence.⁹⁶

Claimant may show that he purchased and paid for the land in question.⁹⁷ He may show the consideration for the alleged sale to him,⁹⁸ and the source from which the money was obtained to pay for the property,⁹⁹ as well as the history of the transaction by which title was acquired,¹ and the motive in purchasing the property.² However, recitals of consideration in the deed from the execution defendant to claimant do not constitute competent evidence of the fact so recited as against the execution plaintiff who was not a party to the deed and did not claim any right under it.³ Evidence that the execution creditor did not know, when furnishing the goods for which the judgment was rendered, that claimant was asserting any title to the property levied on, is not admissible,⁴ nor is evidence that he extended credit on the faith of the possession and claim of ownership of the debtor,⁵ unless claimant authorized or acquiesced in the possession and representations as to ownership.⁶

Evidence as to the ownership of property other than that levied on⁷ or mentioned in the claim filed with the officer⁸ is not admissible.

Judgment, execution, and return. The execution and return are admissible in evidence against claim-

Of remainder interest

Deed conveying remainder interest to claimant held properly admitted.—J. C. & W. C. Holman Mule Co. v. Bullard, 166 S.E. 825, 175 Ga. 900.

Quitclaim deed

(1) Quitclaim deed to defendant in ieri facias, recorded on same day as levy, was held properly admitted.—Deal v. Anderson, 141 S.E. 51, 165 Ga. 416.

(2) Quitclaim deed in execution proceedings was held not inadmissible because recorded more than ten years after sale to claimant, and claimant was held not party to proceedings.—Deal v. Anderson, supra.

Decree canceling quitclaim deed from defendant in ieri facias to original grantor was held not inadmissible because defendant was not party to cancellation proceedings.—Deal v. Anderson, supra.

Identical property

Where the property purchased was the stock of a going business, it was not necessary to show that the levy made under the second execution was on the identical property sold to the wife under the first execution. If the goods levied on were the result of her carrying on said business, or where manufactured or purchased with the proceeds of sale of the property sold to her by the sheriff, or from other funds furnished by her, they were her property and not subject to execution for her husband's debts, and the record evidence offered by her was the first step in the necessary proof and support of her title.—Henderson v. Barnes, supra.

ant;⁹ but an execution which fails to follow the judgment either as to the parties or in amount is properly excluded;¹⁰ and if the execution introduced in evidence is for any reason void there can be no legal verdict in favor of plaintiff in execution.¹¹ Where an execution has been read in evidence, the sheriff may be permitted to testify that he levied on the property by virtue of the execution.¹² A prior execution issued against the property is admissible where the levy is accounted for and its dismissal explained,¹³ and testimony explaining the levy under such prior execution, the dismissal thereof, and the relevy, is admissible.¹⁴ Prior levies may be proved without introducing the executions.¹⁵ In some jurisdictions the record of plaintiff's judgment against defendant in execution is irrelevant and inadmissible;¹⁶ in others it is admissible.¹⁷

Payment of debt. In a claim case claimant may prove that the execution debtor has paid off and satisfied the debt due the execution creditor, where claimant purchased the property from the execution debtor while the judgment was a lien thereon.¹⁸

Indebtedness. Evidence is sometimes admissible to show the indebtedness of the execution defendant to claimant.¹⁹ Some courts hold that evidence is admissible to show the indebtedness of defendant in execution to plaintiff in execution.²⁰ Other courts, however, hold inadmissible evidence as to the transactions by which the indebtedness merged in the judgment was created.²¹ At any rate the indebtedness of defendant in execution to plaintiff in execution cannot be shown by papers made out and executed after claimant's purchase and after plaintiff had obtained judgment.²²

Financial condition of party. The financial condition of the debtor is admissible in evidence, where it tends to show his relationship to the property as against claimant.²³ Also evidence tending to show the financial worth of claimant and her ability to advance money to the execution defendant is admissible.²⁴

Title in third person. As appears supra § 172, claimant must recover on the strength of his own title, and he cannot show to support his claim a title paramount to that of defendant in execution in a third person, a stranger to the proceeding.

Value of property. As plaintiff in execution, if successful on the trial of the right of property, is entitled to a return of the specific thing which was delivered to claimant, or its assessed value, it is allowable for him to offer evidence to the jury to show its value at the time of trial.²⁵ However,

However, it has been held that notes on which plaintiff in execution's judgment was procured are admissible over objections that they contained irrelevant provisions relating to bankruptcy proceedings, and that assignment therein of defendant in execution's homestead and exemption could not convey any title to homestead because it was not shown that defendant in execution was then entitled to homestead and exemption, and that claim was based on bill of sale from defendant in execution, who was claimant's husband, and not on homestead.—Strobel v. Checks

(1) Checks drawn by claimant payable to her husband, the execution defendant, and others are held admissible to show the financial worth of claimant and her ability to advance money to her husband.—Gill v. Willingham, supra.

(2) Checks in favor of claimant by her father, drawn and paid several years before, are admissible to show the ability of claimant to advance money to her husband, the execution defendant, and to pay for the premises in dispute.—Gill v. Willingham, supra.

25. Ala.—Thomas v. De Graffenreid, 27 Ala. 651.

23 C.J. p 600 note 1.

Appraisement

Where a third person claiming goods taken on execution has acquiesced in the valuation by the appraisers, and has given the bond required by the statute in double the amount of that valuation, he cannot subsequently object to the admission of the appraisement in evidence in proceedings to determine their ownership because of irregu-

evidence as to the value of the land levied on but not included in the claim is not admissible;²⁶ nor is evidence admissible as to the value of land not levied on and located in another county.²⁷

Acts, declarations, and admissions in general. As plaintiff in execution succeeds only to the rights of defendant, any act, declaration, or admission of claimant, which would be admissible evidence for or against himself in a suit between him and the execution defendant, is also admissible on the trial of the claim suit;²⁸ and declarations or admissions made by the person from whom defendant in execution traces title, and which as a whole tend to show title to the property in him, are admissible in favor of plaintiff in execution.²⁹ Declarations and admissions by defendant in execution, made in the absence of claimant, as a general rule are inadmissible.³⁰ However, the declarations of defendant in execution, in whose possession the property levied on was found, when made before, or at the time of the levy, are competent evidence to show the nature and character of his possession.³¹ Also, his declarations or admissions are admissible to show the character of the transfer by him to claimant, where the deed is attacked for fraud or want of consideration, if made before the pendency of the litigation, or the existence of the claim sought to be enforced against him.³² Generally the declaration of the person in whose possession the property was found, made at the time of the levy, that he received it from defendant is admissible evidence against claimant.³³ However, declarations of defendant in execution while in possession of the property are admissible on the theory that they constitute a part of the res gestæ; where made at such a time that they do not constitute part of the res gestæ, they are not admissible.³⁴

A statement made by the officer after the levy, not shown to be part of the res gestæ, is hearsay and inadmissible.³⁵

Tax papers and matters relating thereto. Tax receipts held by claimant have been held admissible,³⁶ together with evidence by the execution creditor attacking the receipts,³⁷ but tax bills showing an assessment for taxes are not admissible in favor of claimant where it does not appear that the property claimed is the property assessed.³⁸ Tax books have been held admissible against claimant to show that he gave in no property for taxation,³⁹ and to show that he had no means to purchase the property in dispute.⁴⁰ Tax fieri facias or an appraisal is not admissible against claimant where it is not shown that he had any connection therewith.⁴¹ A return of property for taxes by claimant is admissible as a circumstance indicating ownership, but it raises no presumption of title.⁴² An assessor's certificate that defendant in the execution was not assessed for any property in the township is not admissible.⁴³

Possession. Testimony of the sheriff as to who was in possession when the land was levied on is admissible.⁴⁴ A recital in an entry of levy as to who was in possession at the date of the levy is admissible in evidence thereof,⁴⁵ as is also a forthcoming bond executed by the execution defendant and under which he retained the property in dispute.⁴⁶ The character of the possession of the execution debtor is admissible where he claims a prescriptive title.⁴⁷

Fraud or mala fides. Where the transfer to claimant is attacked for fraud or mala fides, any material evidence tending to show or rebut the fraud or mala fides is admissible.⁴⁸ Thus evidence as to the financial condition of the parties is admissible,⁴⁹ as is also evidence showing design of the judgment debtor and claimant to arrange the purchase of the property so as to defeat the judgment creditor.⁵⁰ However, the execution creditor must show a valid judgment and execution issued thereon before he can attack the transfer to claimant for fraud.⁵¹ Evidence is sometimes admissible to show fraud or mala fides in the acquisition of the property by defendant in execution from claimant.⁵²

c. Weight and Sufficiency

Under the general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally, considered in Evidence §§ 1016-1050, the evidence has been held sufficient⁵³ or the evidence has been

Evidence held admissible

(1) Where plaintiff in execution sought to set aside as fraudulent deed from defendant in execution to his wife, testimony of defendant in execution identifying petition in bankruptcy as his own and other documents in connection with bankruptcy proceedings had more than nine years after execution of deed was admissible.—Miller v. Clermont Banking Co., 179 S.E. 718, 180 Ga. 556.

(2) Where claim was interposed on ground that lien of judgment had been discharged by possession of property subject to lien for four years by a bona fide purchaser for value, claimant's application for a loan, made fifteen days after conveyance of property to her from her sister in which claimant stated that there were two outstanding judgments against her, was admissible as supporting contention of holder of execution that claimant was not a bona fide purchaser for value.—Calhoun v. Williamson, 5 S.E.2d 41, 189 Ga. 65.

(3) Evidence with respect to transfer of truck to corporation by debtor being in fraud of creditors is admissible where debtor had transferred other property with truck in exchange for capital stock and debt on truck which was assumed by corporation was insignificant when compared to value of all property transferred.—*Home Finance Service v. Particular cases

(1) Evidence of husband's purchasing mule levied on, operation of farm, and declaration of ownership, sustained verdict for plaintiff against claim of wife.—Bacon v. Hinesville Bank, 144 S.E. 125, 38 Ga.App. 422.

(2) Evidence that common grantor conveyed to plaintiff in fieri facias prior to claimant and that plaintiff's quitclaim deed to grantor was annulled before claimant paid purchase price authorized verdict finding property levied on subject.—Deal v. Anderson, 141 S.E. 51, 165 Ga. 416.

(3) Property claimed by father was properly found subject to execution against son, under evidence showing deed to father when son was insolvent, not recorded until judgment against son.—Johnson v. Tifton Buick Co., 149 S.E. 73, 40 Ga. App. 158.

(4) Evidence was held to authorize enforcement of execution against one to whom defendant in fieri facias had transferred property, reserving a life estate, notwithstanding property was left entirely in possession and control of transferee.—First Nat. Bank v. Geiger, 7 S.E.2d 756, 61 Ga.App. 865.

(5) Finding that restaurant business was owned by judgment debtor rather than third party claimant was held justified.—Longo v. Leo Feist, Inc., C.C.A.La., 58 F.2d 767.

(6) Where corporation organized by debtor claimed funds in bank levied on under execution, evidence showing that corporation was a family affair and that funds of debtor and corporation were intermingled and that debtor's personal obligations were paid by corporation and debtor's private funds deposited in corporation's bank account warranted conclusion that funds were property of judgment debtor and authorized judgment denying third-party claim.—Goldberg v. Engelberg, 92 P.2d 935, 34 Cal.App.2d 10.

(7) Evidence held insufficient to show that execution plaintiff, the divorced wife of the execution defendant, had notice of conditional sales contract under which the property involved was sold by claimant to her husband.—C. I. T. Corporation v. Stephens, 174 So. 493, 234 Ala. 303.

(8) Earlier cases see 23 C.J. p 602 note 27 [a].

Evidence sufficient for prima facie case

(1) Evidence showing that property levied on was in possession and control of judgment debtor.—Ballard v. Baker, 148 So. 835, 227 Ala. 143.

(2) Evidence of execution, with entry of levy showing that defendant in execution was in possession of property at date of levy.—Veal v. Veal, Ga., 15 S.E.2d 725—Nolley v. Elliott, 178 S.E. 309, 50 Ga.App. 382—Pritchett v. Bagby, 169 S.E. 211, 46 Ga.App. 772.

(3) Evidence of execution and levy.—Grant v. Sosebee, 159 S.E. 672, 173 Ga. 98.

(4) Evidence that crops were grown on land rented by defendant and produced by defendant's labor.—Kimbrel v. Grow, 147 S.E. 915, 39 Ga.App. 594.

(5) Evidence showing execution plaintiff's prior possession, sale to defendant, with retention of title, and execution on judgment for unpaid purchase money, claimant introducing no evidence of title.—Terrell v. Gould, 148 S.E. 515, 168 Ga. 607.

held or determined to be insufficient⁵⁴ to warrant a verdict for the execution plaintiff, or sufficient⁵⁵ or, according to the decisions on the ques-

(6) Claimant's introduction of evidence that his only claim of title was under testator of defendant in execution established prima facie case for plaintiff in execution.—Hardin v. Pie, 176 S.E. 14, 179 Ga. 446.

(7) Prima facie case for plaintiffs in fieri facias was held not rebutted by plaintiffs' inability to question tax sale at which claimant purchased property.—Thompson v. Vanderbilt, 142 S.E. 665, 166 Ga. 132.

Verdict for claimant not required

(1) Where claimant has the burden of proof and the only evidence tending to establish title to the property is the parol testimony of claimant that execution defendant is indebted to claimant and executed to him a bill of sale to the property.—Wilson v. Voche, 172 S.E. 672, 48 Ga.App. 173.

(2) Evidence of husband's possession of land levied on and conveyance to wife not paying for land did not demand verdict for wife claiming land.—James v. Hudson, 152 S.E. 829, 170 Ga. 321.

(3) Where claimant claimed as purchaser from defendant in execution's testator, evidence was held not to demand finding that all purchase money had been paid.—Hardin v. Pie, 176 S.E. 14, 179 Ga. 446.

(4) Inference of defendant's ownership of crops levied on was held not conclusively rebutted by wife's claim that husband acted as her agent and that she paid for raising crops.—Kimbrel v. Grow, 147 S.E. 915, 39 Ga.App. 594.

(5) That claimant bought property from defendant in fieri facias was held not conclusively to establish title superior to fieri facias lien, where claimant knew at time of purchase that there was a fieri facias against defendant, which evidence did not conclusively show was other than fieri facias levied on property.—Morehead v. Holland Bros., 165 S.E. 926, 45 Ga.App. 708.

(6) Where property was found in execution defendant's possession, mere showing that it was purchased by claimant more than five years before the levy does not require verdict for him.—Baxter v. Hinesville Bank, 167 S.E. 117, 46 Ga.App. 152.

Fraud

Registration of automobile furnished by employee's manager for use of defendant employee, in latter's name, was held not badge of fraud.—Cornelia Bank v. Taylor, 140 S.E. 901, 37 Ga.App. 538.

Particular cases

Need not prove absolute ownership

Claimant of property seized under execution need only prove ownership and right of possession superior to judgment debtor.—Kuhn v. Lewis, 279 P. 597, 153 Wash. 457.

Particular cases

(1) Evidence showing that wife of execution defendant purchased automobile from claimant rebutted evidence of defendant's possession, and authorized finding for claimant.—Donald v. S. S. Howze Motor Co., 115 So. 221, 22 Ala.App. 282, certiorari denied 115 So. 223, 217 Ala. 225.

(2) Evidence that interest of defendant in fieri facias was that of seller under contract retaining title to property levied on and other property as security for purchase money, but not disclosing what portion of debt had been paid or what portion of debt had reference to property levied on, authorized judgment for claimant, the conditional buyer.—D. A. Schulte, Inc. v. Varron, 184 S.E. 356, 52 Ga.App. 683, conforming to answers 182 S.E. 912, 181 Ga. 542.

(3) Claimants' uncontradicted testimony that defendant in execution had agreed that they could have part of property seized in consideration of their services entitled claimants to recovery.—Pritchett v. Bagby, 169 S.E. 211, 46 Ga.App. 772.

(4) Evidence that claimant of property was a minor, and had been given permission by his father to make for himself crops levied on, and had produced crop jointly with another on land owned by his mother, was held to establish claimant's title to at least fractional part of crops levied on.—H. B. Ehrlich & Co. v. King, 181 S.E. 524, 34 Ga.App. 737.

(5) Evidence that judgment debtor's sister rented farm to debtor's son, that she furnished money for purchase of stock and machinery, that debtor who later moved on farm had no personal property of any particular value, that son did practically all the farm work and bought the machinery used and the seed which was planted, was sufficient to show title in claimant, notwithstanding father for purpose of procuring a government loan had once represented that he was sole owner of grain and hay levied on and that debtor received the checks when grain was sold.—Farnham v. Swartwout, 16 N.E.2d 540, 296 Ill.App. 649.

(6) In proceeding on claim of property, comprising bank deposits, levied on under execution, evidence showing definitely that there were beneficial owners entitled to the deposits, which were held in name of judgment debtor as agent and as trustee, although indefinite as to their identity, was held to authorize recovery by debtor claiming deposits as trustee and agent.—Moran v. Joyce, 18 A.2d 708, 125 N.J.Law 558, affirmed Joyce v. Moran, 23 A.2d 396, 127 N.J.Law 562.

(7) Where, on the trial of a sheriff's interpleader to determine title to property, there is testimony that claimant bought the property at a sheriff's sale and the crier of the sale testifies to this effect, claimant's right to go to the jury is not defeated by the testimony of the prothonotary that there was no record of such a sale. There may have been a public sale, although the witnesses may have been mistaken in stating that it was a sheriff's sale.—Schweitzer v. Williams, 43 Pa.Super. 202.

(8) Conclusion that third party claimant owned lease and certain personality, but was letting judgment debtor use them in restaurant business, result being that business income and property purchased therewith was judgment debtor's, was held justified.—Longo v. Leo Feist, Inc., C.C.A.La., 58 F.2d 767.

(9) Earlier cases see 23 C.J. p 602 note 29 [a].

Contradictory testimony

Where testimony of execution defendant, claimant's only witness, was contradictory as to the time when claimant bought the property, whether before or after the obtaining of the judgment by the execution plaintiff, the jury's finding that the sale

tion, insufficient⁵⁶ to warrant a verdict for claimant. Such general rules apply as well to the determination of who was in possession of the property levied on,⁵⁷ and its value.⁵⁸ Where the undisputed evidence shows the title to the property in question to be in claimant, he is entitled to judgment,⁵⁹ and a verdict in favor of the execution plaintiff is unauthorized,⁶⁰ and this, even though the witnesses who testified were closely related to claimant.⁶¹ Also a verdict in favor of the execution plaintiff is unauthorized where the uncontradicted evidence conclusively rebuts the prima facie case made by claimant's admission that the execution defendant was in possession of the property levied on at the time of the levy.⁶² If evidence that a portion of the property levied on was the property of claimant is undisputed, a verdict finding all the property subject to the fieri facias is unauthorized.⁶³ So the uncontradicted testimony of claimant that the property levied on had been took place before the judgment was returned was authorized.—N. Seligman & Co. v. Daniels, 7 S.E.2d 207, 61 Ga.App. 648.

Delay in presenting claim

Third opponent's delay in suing out injunction until just before sale of property under execution was held not alone to establish that his claim of ownership was fraudulently interposed to defeat plaintiff's claim.—Iberville Land & Securities Co. v. Hurdle, La.App., 151 So. 254.

Clear evidence of transfer

Parol contract for sale of interest of heir to pay indebtedness to estate, to defeat lien of judgment against selling heir, must be clearly established.—Preston v. Porter Fertilizer Co., 150 S.E. 149, 169 Ga. 288.

Particular cases

(1) Evidence was held not to establish consummated sale of automobile as against judgment creditor seeking to appropriate automobile to satisfaction of judgment under execution.—Charles Ringling Co. v. Muirhead, 133 So. 108, 101 Fla. 1215.

(2) Where claim was interposed on ground that execution had become dormant because of expiration of seven years between entries on execution and their record on execution docket and between dates of any bona fide public effort to enforce execution, evidence was insufficient to establish dormancy of execution where evidence established a bona fide public effort to enforce execution within seven-year period, and execution and entries thereon were not in evidence.—Calhoun v. Williamson, 5 S.E.2d 41, 189 Ga. 65.

(3) Interest of heir orally contracting to sell interest to pay debt to estate was held properly found subject to execution against heir, where contract was not clearly established.—Preston v. Porter Fertilizer Co., 150 S.E. 149, 169 Ga. 288.

(4) Debtor's testimony that corn crop levied on in his possession belonged to wife, where based on other testimony that crop was raised on wife's land, was held insufficient to authorize finding for wife.—Lane v. Happ Bros. Co., 162 S.E. 519, 44 Ga. App. 577.

(5) Where joint claimants under a mortgage by the execution defendant to a partnership failed to show that the property was theirs jointly, by proof of the dissolution of the partnership, and that they were its surviving partners the evidence was insufficient.—Brantley v. Thomas, 70 So. 122, 194 Ala. 646.

Insurance policy

On application for injunction against sale, under writ of fieri facias of contents of building at 852 S. Street, insurance policy taken out in claimant's name and purporting to cover furniture in different building, with rider attached after the seizure stating correct location was 852 S. Street, was neither muniment of title, nor corroborative of title, and not binding on the judgment creditor.—Parsons v. Cox, 96 So. 823, 153 La. 957.

Waiver of defects in levy

Finding that mortgagee of cattle did not waive right to attack levy thereon by recital, in agreement to place proceeds of cattle with stakeholder pending litigation, that execution had been legally executed was held sustained by evidence and, therefore, conclusive.—Western Nat. Bank of Hereford v. Steele, Tex.Civ. App., 36 S.W.2d 271, error dismissed.

57. Husband or wife

(1) Evidence did not demand finding that wife claiming land was in possession at time of levy against husband.—James v. Hudson, 152 S. E. 829, 170 Ga. 321.

(2) Husband's use of wife's property does not exclude wife, but possession will be referred to title.—Donald v. S. S. Howze Motor Co., 115 So. 221, 22 Ala.App. 382, certiorari denied 115 So. 223, 217 Ala. 225.

58. Pa.—Little v. Fearon, 49 Pa. Super. 634.

Values stated in bill of sale

Where a wife to whom her husband executed a bill of sale of furniture which was subsequently taken on execution on a judgment against her husband becomes claimant of the goods on a sheriff's interpleader, the trial court cannot consider the prices fixed in the bill of sale as sufficient evidence of the value of the goods.—Little v. Fearon, supra.

Effect of prior valuation

On a new trial of the title to property levied on under an execution, the fact that the value of the property as found was much less than that found on the previous trial, and less than that fixed by the sheriff in claimant's bond, is no ground for reversal, the amount found on the former trial being out of the case, and the value fixed by the sheriff in taking claimant's bond not being conclusive.—Ryan v. Teague, 110 S.W. 117, 50 Tex.Civ.App. 153.

59. La.—Cassiere v. Cuban Coffee Mills, App., 175 So. 491.

Prior failure to testify

Uncontradicted testimony that third opponent owned property seized should not be disbelieved merely because on prior provisional seizure third opponent and his witnesses failed to testify that third opponent owned such property, since only issue on provisional seizure was location of property at time of seizure.—Iberville Land & Securities Co. v. Hurdle, La.App., 151 So. 254.

bought by him with his own means, and had never been owned since his purchase by anyone else, is sufficient to entitle him to recover;⁶⁴ as is the undisputed testimony of claimant and the execution defendant that the property had been bought for claimant with his money by defendant as his agent.⁶⁵ So, too, evidence that claimant was a bona fide purchaser for value from one to whom defendant in execution had, before the date of plaintiff's judgment, on a valuable and adequate consideration, in good faith, conveyed the property in dispute, requires a verdict for claimant.⁶⁶ A derangement of title from a third party makes a prima facie case, but it does not conclude an execution creditor from showing that the title was in fact in the execution debtor at the time of the levy.⁶⁷ On the other hand, a judgment by default or confession is not evidence of the justness or existence of a debt in favor of claimant, as against plaintiff in execution;⁶⁸ nor can a recovery be had by claimant where the only title shown by him is one acquired after issue joined.⁶⁹ Claimant's title must be shown to have existed at the time of the levy.⁷⁰ The fact that claimant concealed the property in order to escape the levy is not of itself sufficient to authorize a finding that the property is subject to levy.⁷¹

Existence of debt. The debt due the execution plaintiff is sufficiently proved by the introduction in evidence of the writ of execution, from which a valid judgment is presumed.⁷²

§ 186. Trial

- a. In general
- b. Province of court and jury
- c. Instructions
- d. Verdict and findings

a. In General

The conduct of the trial or hearing of a claim case rests largely in the court's discretion, which is to be exercised with a view to the application of the governing statutes to the particular facts. In general, the party having the burden of proof has the right to open and close.

The rule that the conduct of the trial or hearing of a claim case is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the court has been applied to the examination of witnesses,⁷³ the postponement of the trial,⁷⁴ and other matters.⁷⁵ The fact that a claim proceeding was not tried at the next succeeding term of court after the affidavit and bond were filed has been held not to preclude a subsequent trial.⁷⁶

A rule on claimant to submit himself to cross-examination, taken before the time allowed for filing his bond, is premature.⁷⁷ It is error to render a personal judgment by default against claimant without a writ of inquiry as to the value of the property.⁷⁸ Where the statute governing the trial of the right to property provides that there shall be no written pleadings, but does not require defendant to state, at the beginning of the case, what his defense is, such requirement is error.⁷⁹ Particular circumstances connected with the award of

Continuance to show service

Where claimant has shown, by an exemplification of the record of the suit in which the judgment was obtained under which the execution was levied, that defendant therein had not been served, the court should refuse a continuance to allow plaintiff to show the contrary, since the record can be perfected only in the court rendering the original judgment.—Aycock v. Turner, 52 Ga. 591.

Continuance without showing of good cause

Order continuing, without showing as to good cause, hearing on petition to have title to property determined violated statute but was not in excess of jurisdiction.—Duncan v. Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, 285 P. 732, 104 Cal.App. 218.

75. Proceeding with trial of interpleader was held not abuse of discretion, notwithstanding claimant's objection that rule to open judgment was pending, where claimant was not party to judgment.—Kupres v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 101 Pa.Super. 351.

In admitting tax returns as evidence in a claim case, it was not error for the court to read, or cause to be read, to the jury the oath prescribed for the taxpayer by statute, such oath being a part of the returns.—McLendon v. Dunlap Hardware Co., 59 S.E. 718, 3 Ga.App. 206.

After submitting his proof to the jury on an issue involving the precedence of an execution or of deeds, without a motion to dismiss or withdraw the levy, plaintiff in fieri facias cannot complain after verdict that the levy should have been dismissed.—Groves v. Williams, 69 Ga. 614.

a judgment for a claimant have been held to show an arbitrary disposal of the proceeding, rather than a trial or judicial determination thereof, so as to require reversal.⁸⁰

In Maryland the claim must be heard on the merits by a jury if either party requires, but, if the parties agree, the court may hear and pass on the merits in a summary way, and neither party can thereafter complain.⁸¹ In Pennsylvania an issue directed under the Interpleader Act is not subject to the provisions of the Compulsory Arbitration Act.⁸² Such statute has been interpreted as intending that the value of the goods taken by claimant should be determined in the same proceeding in which the bond is filed by him, and the amount of the surety's liability thus definitely determined.⁸³

Determining who has burden of proof; right to open and close. In a claim case, if the possession of the property is not admitted or shown, or is uncertain, the trial court should hear evidence and direct which party shall assume the burden of proof.⁸⁴ If defendant in execution was in possession of the property at the date of the levy, the burden in the claim case is on claimant, see supra § 185, and he is entitled to the opening and conclusion of the argument;⁸⁵ where the entry of the levy does not show that the execution defendant was in possession, the execution plaintiff, having the burden of proof, is entitled to open and close;⁸⁶ but if, where the execution defendant was in possession, claimant fails to assume the burden of proof, plaintiff, on being directed to assume the affirmative, is entitled to open and close;⁸⁷ and where, neither by the entry of levy nor the admission of claimant, the possession of the property is shown to be in the execution defendant, and plaintiff, taking the burden of proof, establishes the fact by evidence introduced on the trial, he and not claimant is entitled to the conclusion, unless claimant introduces no evidence.⁸⁸ After evidence by plaintiff showing the possession of the property levied on to be in defendant, claimant cannot open and close by admitting the possession of the property in defendant at the time of levy.⁸⁹

b. Province of Court and Jury

All controverted questions of fact in a claim case are for the jury. In a proper case, a verdict may be directed for claimant or the execution creditor.

All controverted questions of fact in a claim case are as a rule to be submitted to the determination of the jury,⁹⁰ which determines the weight, credibility, and reasonableness of evidence.⁹¹

Mixed question of law and fact

(1) Whether claim to property levied on under writ of execution is interposed to delay satisfaction of writ so as to entitle judgment plaintiff to damages, under a statute providing therefor, may be a question of fact or of law or a mixed question of law and fact.—Penney v. Stout, 168 So. 697, 232 Ala. 564.

(2) On the trial of a sheriff's interpleader to determine the ownership of property, where the evidence discloses circumstances out of the ordinary, and complicated, and the controlling question is a mixed one of law and of fact, the case must be resolved by a jury under proper instructions from the court.—Bleakley v. The direction of a verdict is proper where there is no material fact in substantial dispute on the evidence,⁹² but not where the evidence raises an issue of fact under the pleadings,⁹³ so in a proper case a verdict may be directed for the execution creditor⁹⁴ or claimant.⁹⁵ A verdict should be directed for claimant where the court refuses to admit the execution in evidence because it is void,⁹⁶ where the evidence in behalf of claimant shows title in him and is undisputed,⁹⁷ where he conclusively rebuts the prima facie case of plaintiff in fieri facias,⁹⁸ or where he introduces a valid bill of sale to the property levied on, given by defendant in fieri facias and antedating the execution.⁹⁹ It is error to direct a verdict for plaintiff in execution, or against claimant, or a verdict finding the property subject to execution, where the execution is not offered in evidence,¹ or where there is evidence showing or tending to show right or title in claimant,² or where the evidence leaves the question of possession or ownership in uncertainty,³ or merely because a deed from defendant in execution to claimant bears a date subsequent to that of the execution.⁴ It is error to direct a verdict for claimant where the evidence admits of a reasonable difference of opinion as to the superiority of his claim,⁵ or where there is evidence tending to show ownership and possession in defendant in execution.⁶

Nonsuit. Where an action is brought, the court may award a nonsuit in a proper case.⁷

c. Instructions

The instructions in the trial of a claim case must conform to the rules governing instructions in civil cases generally.

tion which is misleading¹¹ or prejudicial to either party,¹² or which in any manner invades the province of the jury by withdrawing from their consideration any question of fact,¹³ is erroneous, as is an instruction which incorrectly states the issues,¹⁴ or is not pertinent thereto,¹⁵ or which improperly restricts the jury in the determination of the issues.¹⁶ It is proper for the court to instruct the jury as to the effect of proof of possession in the execution defendant.¹⁷

Where fraud is alleged, the instructions should be accompanied by a statement of the facts necessary to constitute fraud in law,¹⁸ and it is proper to direct the jury's attention to peculiar circumstances which, if unexplained, tend to show fraud.¹⁹

d. Verdict and Findings

Verdict and findings in claim cases must conform to rules governing verdicts and findings in civil actions generally, such as the requirement of certainty, and to the special requirements of applicable statutes, such as those requiring assessment of the value of the property.

In order to support a judgment, the verdict in a claim case must be certain²⁰ and responsive to the issue or issues²¹ and to the evidence;²² the verdict is sufficient in point of certainty where it is as certain as the issue submitted to it for trial.²³

A general verdict "for the plaintiffs" has been held sufficient,²⁴ and it is mere surplusage to state the amount for which claimant and his sureties are bound.²⁵ So, a verdict finding the property to belong to the execution creditor, although it should have stated the ownership to be that of the execution debtor, while informal, is sufficient.²⁶ Under statutes governing sheriff's interpleader, the only permissible verdicts have been said to be a verdict generally for claimant if he establishes his prop-

Issue as to whether property is subject; money verdict

"In the trial of a statutory claim case, the sole issue is whether the property is subject or not subject to the fi. fa. The verdict in such a case . . . cannot stand, unless it is so phrased as to determine this issue with definiteness. A verdict in favor of the plaintiff against the claimant for a given sum of money, without more, not only fails to determine the sole issue in the case, but deals with issues not involved therein. Such a verdict is a nullity on the face of the record."—Moseley v. Binford, 121 S. E. 127, 31 Ga.App. 513.

Theory of claim; plea on which verdict rendered

Statutory rule that, if several pleas are filed by defendant, verdict for defendant shall show on which of pleas verdict is rendered has no application to claim case, although claimant may introduce evidence to sustain claim on several theories.—Wells v. Blitch, 192 S.E. 209, 184 Ga. 616.

erty claim, and a verdict for the execution creditor for a definite amount if he fails to establish it.²⁷

By statute, the jury may bring in a verdict as to part of the property only, without mentioning the rest.²⁸ A verdict that part of the property is liable to the execution is equivalent to finding the residue not liable;²⁹ but, where the verdict contains findings that a part of the property is subject to the execution and that another part is not subject, its silence as to the remainder is simply a lack of finding and that part of the issue remains to be tried.³⁰

No finding as to the amount due on the execution is necessary.³¹ A finding in favor of claimant is sufficient without a further finding against the execution creditor;³² and a verdict finding in favor of claimant the title to the property in question is to be construed as including a finding that the property is not subject to levy and sale under the feri facias.³³ Findings may be in such conflict with one another as to preclude the rendition of any judgment in the case, in the absence of a motion for a judgment non obstante veredicto.³⁴

Assessing value of property. Where the verdict is against claimant, it is necessary in some states for it to assess the value of the property,³⁵ although it has been held that the jury need not find the value of the property where its value was not expressly put in issue.³⁶ When so required, the verdict must, if practicable, assess the value of each article separately.³⁷ The statutes must be

In New York a sheriff's jury finding that the property belongs to claimant must determine its value and the damages above its value which he will sustain if the levy is not released.³⁹

Setting aside verdict. The verdict of a jury impaneled by the sheriff to try the validity of a claim by a third person to property levied on is not such a judicial determination as may be reviewed, in the absence of an express statutory provision authorizing a review, since it is not conclusive of the ownership of the property, and therefore a motion will not lie to set aside such verdict.⁴⁰ A court's order entered on a verdict becomes final on the adjournment of the term and cannot be set aside at a subsequent term on a motion to set aside the verdict.⁴¹

§ 187. Judgment and Enforcement Thereof

The judgment in statutory proceedings to establish a claim by a third person must conform to the applicable statutory provisions. Such provisions have been applied to various matters of form and substance in judgments for and against claimants, including default judgments.

The judgment in a claim case should be in accordance with statutory provisions regulating its form,⁴² although a mere clerical misprision may be amended on motion.⁴³ The judgment must conform to the pleadings,⁴⁴ and may determine equitable rights of the parties where supported by proper pleadings.⁴⁵ It need not determine the priorities of

Where claimant to goods levied on wherein sheriff entered a rule for an interpleader issue failed to establish his title to goods, direction of court that interpleader be dismissed was without legal warrant and constituted a mistrial.—Patterson v. Brett, 189 A. 756, 125 Pa.Super. 117.

Alternative relief improper

Where petition of intervention in feri facias proceeding was based solely on theory that intervenor delivered merchandise seized under writ to plaintiff's judgment debtor on consignment and remained owner thereof, but evidence showed without contradiction that intervenor sold and delivered merchandise to such debtor, and petition contained no alternative prayer for vendor's lien and privilege, judgment for intervenor, maintaining such lien and privilege and ordering constable to pay proceeds of sale of merchandise to intervenor, was erroneous.—Faber v. liens, although it is stipulated that the court is to fix the legal rights of all the parties.⁴⁶

Where want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record, the proceedings should be dismissed.⁴⁷ Where the evidence introduced by claimant fails to rebut plaintiff's prima facie case, the dismissal of the claim, instead of letting the case proceed to verdict subjecting the property, is proper.⁴⁸ Where the statute so provides, if the execution creditor fails to make out a prima facie case, and claimant introduces no evidence, the court should either dismiss the levy or the case rather than direct a verdict for claimant,⁴⁹ and where there is no evidence to show possession or title of the execution debtor the court may dismiss the levy,⁵⁰ as it may where the fieri facias is refused in evidence for an irregularity therein;⁵¹ and where no evidence is introduced by the parties, and the levy is dismissed on technical grounds, a judgment awarding the fund to claimant is error.⁵²

A judgment entered on the verdict of a jury has been held to become final on adjournment of the term during which it was entered.⁵³

A judgment in favor of the claimant should be so framed as to affect only his rights as against plaintiff in execution, so that it is error for the court to dismiss a levy where it appears that a part only of the property levied on is claimed; it should be dismissed only as to that part as to which the claimant establishes his claim.⁵⁴ Similarly on a claim by a mortgagee, it is error to discharge the property from all liens by reason of the levy, where the levy is good as to the judgment debtor, although inferior to the claimant's mortgage.⁵⁵ Where after a verdict for plaintiff, a new trial is granted unless he will dismiss his levy as to a portion of the property, which is done, and the parties agree that the residue shall be subject to the execution, judgment on the finding of the jury, as so modified, is proper.⁵⁶ In at least one jurisdiction, the only judgment for the claimant which is permitted by statute is one for the property and costs.⁵⁷

Judgment against claimant generally. The judgment for plaintiff in execution in a claim case should, under some statutes, be that the property is subject to the execution,⁵⁸ and that plaintiff in execution recover from the claimant the damages assessed by the jury, together with his costs.⁵⁹ Under other statutes the judgment must be in the alternative, for the specific property or its assessed value;⁶⁰ but in at least one jurisdiction this form of judgment is improper.⁶¹ In some,⁶² but not in

Property surrendered by sheriff

Court is without jurisdiction except to render judgment of dismissal in claim proceeding to recover property levied on under execution, where it appeared that sheriff had surrendered possession thereof to one whose right was superior to that of any party to the proceeding.—American Asphalt Roof Corporation v. Automatic election

other,⁶³ jurisdictions, judgment may be rendered against the claimant and his sureties on the bond in the event of his failure to establish his right; judgment against the sureties alone is not authorized.⁶⁴ It has been held that judgment cannot be rendered against an unsuccessful claimant for the value of the property;⁶⁵ but under other authority judgment may be rendered in favor of plaintiff in execution for the amount of his claim up to, but not exceeding, the value of the goods,⁶⁶ the value being that at the time of the trial, with interest from that date.⁶⁷

Default judgment; failure to appear or join issue. Where claimant fails to appear or join issue, plaintiff in execution is entitled to a judgment by default against him as in other cases;⁶⁸ but if the statute prescribes subsequent proceedings on the failure of either claimant or plaintiff in execution to join issue such proceedings must be taken.⁶⁹ Until after issue has been directed by the court, no judgment by default can be rendered against a claimant who by giving the statutory bond has obtained possession of the property.⁷⁰

Under some statutes it has been held that where claimant fails to put in an appearance, the proper practice is either to dismiss the claim, or allow the execution creditor to make out his case and take a verdict finding the property subject to the execution;⁷¹ but where there has been no return of the papers at the proper term, and claimant therefore takes it for granted that the levy has been abandoned, the execution creditor should not be allowed in the absence of claimant to tender issue and introduce evidence and obtain a verdict finding the property subject, but the court should dismiss the proceeding;⁷² and where issue has not been joined, and neither the execution creditor nor his counsel appears, the levy should be dismissed instead of directing a verdict finding the property not subject.⁷³

Judgment against execution defendant. It is error to render a new judgment against the execution debtor, thus making him liable for the costs and the penalty.⁷⁴

Assessment of value of property. It has been required, under governing statutes, that a judgment against the claimant assess the value of property for which he may become liable on his bond;⁷⁵ but under other authority, where the bond does not state the separate value of the property and there is no issue on that point, the judgment need not ascertain it.⁷⁶ A statute requiring the assessment of the value of property levied on as of the time the claim is interposed and possession is obtained by the claimant has been held inapplicable where the issues were found for the claimant.⁷⁷

lect to return it within ten days after adverse judgment, law automatically makes election that money judgment stands.—Gonzales v. Vargo, 273 P. 725, 34 Ariz. 556.

Value of property fixed by sheriff

That claim bond did not expressly state value of property and sheriff did not state such value in return on execution held not to show conclusively that value was not fixed by sheriff.—State v. Wright, 145 So. 598, 107 Fla. 178.

63. Ala.—Langworthy v. Goodall, 76 Ala. 325.

Error harmless

Where complainant introduced sheriff's return showing that property levied on was worth more than penalty of bond, rendition of personal judgment against claimant and sureties was not harmful error, if error at all, in view of absence of evidence as to whereabouts of the property or its then value.—Miller v. McWhorter, 161 So. 672, 173 Miss. 16.

Notice of proceedings claim case may be enforced by execution;⁷⁸ and it has been held that, where the claimant has obtained a verdict for the property, he may on entering judgment issue execution for costs.⁷⁹ After reversal of the principal judgment, a judgment of condemnation cannot be enforced beyond the amount of the costs in the proceeding in which it was rendered.⁸⁰

§ 186. Reinstatement, New Trial, and Review

Except as its powers may be limited by statute, the court may, on a proper showing, award a new trial in a claim case. The right of appeal, jurisdiction thereof, the sufficiency of the record, and the scope of review, in a claim case, are generally regulated by the ordinary rules governing review.

On a proper showing the court may award a new trial in a claim case, as in other civil cases,⁸¹ except that where the statute provides a complete and exclusive method of procedure during and after the trial of the claim, the court has no inherent authority to grant a new trial not authorized by the statute.⁸² Defendant in fieri facias is not such a party to the claim action that he may move for a new trial after a verdict for claimant therein.⁸³ An objection to the validity of the execution cannot be raised on a motion for a new trial;⁸⁴ nor can rulings made on the trial of the claim case be considered on a motion for a new trial on the question of damages only where that question is tried separately.⁸⁵

When in a claim case the execution levy has been improperly dismissed, the court may correct the error at the same term by reinstating the case on motion.⁸⁶ The remedy for an erroneous reinstatement is by a motion to review the order.⁸⁷ Where the judgment is set aside and the case reopened, the issue of the value of the property is necessarily involved on the subsequent trial.⁸⁸ Where claimant⁸⁹ or his agent⁹⁰ was guilty of inexcusable neglect in allowing a default judgment to be taken against claimant, he cannot have the judgment set aside by a bill in equity.

Time for motion

(1) Where original defendant in fieri facias filed motion for new trial in claim case after verdict against claimant, claimant's motion to substitute itself as movant, filed more than thirty days after rendition of the verdict, was too late, and did not authorize granting new trial to claimant.—Arnoldsville Trading Co. v. Brotherton, 6 S.E.2d 210, 61 Ga.App. 370.

(2) Where trial court ordered new trial after it mistakenly directed that interpleader be dismissed, overruling objection to order granting new trial on ground that it was made after end of term was not error, since directing new trial merely recognized consequences of mistrial after dismissing interpleader without verdict for either claimant or defendant.—Patterson v. Brett, 189 A. 756, 135 Pa. Super. 117.

Grounds lacking

(1) In proceeding by executrix on claim to property levied on as property of devisee, failure to request submission of question to jury under statute until after evidence was closed was not ground for new trial where request was made before argument.—Walker v. Horton, 191 S.E. 462, 184 Ga. 429.

(2) On the trial of a claim case, the overruling of a motion to dismiss the levy under a fieri facias cannot be made a ground of a motion for new trial, but should be made the subject of direct exception.—Blackstock v. Blackman, 108 S.E. 775, 152 Ga. 179.

(3) Where claimant of legal title and claimant of equitable title filed claims, the latter filed a subsequent claim alleging that she had obtained the legal title in the intervening time, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of her second claim, the execution creditors were not entitled to a new trial on the ground that she asserted legal title too late.—McBride v. Who may appeal

A surety in an execution levied on the property of the principal debtor has such an interest in the controversy over the ownership of the property to which he is a party as to entitle him to appeal from a judgment discharging it from the lien of the execution.—Hanna v. Charleston Nat. Bank, 46 S.E. 920, 55 W.Va. 185.

92. In New Jersey

the sufficiency of the record⁹⁴ are generally governed by the rules relating to proceedings for review in ordinary cases. This is also true as to the scope and extent of the review; so that, matters which do not properly appear of record,⁹⁵ or are first urged on appeal,⁹⁶ or involve the discretion of the lower court,⁹⁷ will not ordinarily be considered. So, the judgment will not be reversed for immaterial or harmless errors.⁹⁸ On appeal of claimant from an adverse judgment, defendant in error cannot complain of the denial by the lower court of his motion for judgment for damages where he suffered from no manifest error or injustice.⁹⁹ The judgment will be reversed where the proceedings were not instituted in accordance with the provisions of the statute.¹ Since the sheriff is not a necessary party to the claim proceeding, his failure to appeal is not a ground for dismissal of a party's appeal.²

Where a judgment for claimant is set aside on appeal, plaintiff in execution is entitled to a judgment for the value of the property and legal interest thereon from the date of the bond, together with damages.³

Withdrawal of a claim on appeal is considered in § 182 supra.

§ 189. Damages and Penalties against Unsuccessful Claimant

Under statutes so providing, damages or a penalty may be recovered, on a proper showing, against an unsuccessful claimant, as for filing or continuing the claim for purposes of delay only.

Under statutes so providing, damages, or a penalty, may be awarded against an unsuccessful claimant,⁴ as for filing or continuing the claim for purposes of delay only.⁵ Before damages may be legally awarded, the case must be brought within the statute⁶ by means of competent and relevant evidence,⁷ and there must be a finding of the value of the property on which the execution was levied.⁸ Where any part of the property levied on is found not to be subject to the execution, damages cannot be awarded.⁹

§ 190. Costs

The costs in a claim suit are largely in the court's discretion; authorities disagree as to the awarding of costs to or against a partially successful claimant. The propriety of allowing various items as costs, such as fees for the attorney for plaintiff in execution and for claimant's attorney, has been variously decided.

While the costs in a claim suit are largely in the discretion of the court, and do not necessarily follow the verdict or decision,¹⁰ yet they have been awarded against the defeated party in a number of cases.¹¹ A claimant who is only partially successful may, in the discretion of the court, be taxed with full costs,¹² or he may be granted judgment without costs,¹³ or, although there is some dis-

In claim suit where claimant had actual knowledge of execution and constructive notice of registration of judgment which made execution superior to claimant's claim and sole excuse for interposition of inferior claim was lack of actual knowledge of such registration, determination that claim was interposed for purposes of delay was not error and justified recovery of damages by judgment plaintiff.—Penney v. sent,¹⁴ the costs may be apportioned between the parties;¹⁵ but a partially successful claimant has been held entitled to costs.¹⁶

The costs cannot be taxed against one not a party to the record;¹⁷ thus, except under a statute having a different effect,¹⁸ the costs cannot be awarded against the sureties on claimant's bond.¹⁹

Taxation and items allowable. A fee for the attorney for plaintiff in execution may be included in his costs.²⁰ The allowance of an attorney's fee to a successful claimant has been held proper by some authorities²¹ and improper by another.²² The amount to be allowed as the attorney's fee when such allowance is proper is in the discretion of the court.²³

Where claimant has given a bond for the release of the property, plaintiff in execution cannot be charged by the sheriff with the expense of keeping it;²⁴ but where, after the claim has been tried and the property found subject to the execution, plaintiff in execution directs a second levy, the costs thereof and of keeping the property thereafter are assessable against him.²⁵ A successful claimant of crops levied on is not chargeable with the expense of gathering, harvesting, or threshing.²⁶

Security for costs. It has been held that the statutory trial is not a "suit" within the meaning of a statute requiring security for costs.²⁷ A nonresident plaintiff in execution is not required to give security for the costs in a claim case,²⁸ at least where the burden of proof is not on him.²⁹ Under a statute providing for dismissal of an intervention when security for costs is not timely given, the court has discretion to allow a subsequent filing of security.³⁰

Sale of property for costs. In case of a finding against claimant of property taken in execution, the property cannot be sold to pay the costs of the trial of the right of property.³¹

The operation and effect of the determination in a claim proceeding depends on the terms of the finding and the statutory provisions; the judgment is commonly treated as conclusive on the parties to the proceeding, but not on strangers thereto. The dismissal of a claim not on the merits does not preclude another interposition of the claim. After a judgment against claimant, the property may be resealed and sold under the original judgment.

The operation and effect of a finding for or against claimant depends on the terms thereof and the statutory provisions in the particular jurisdiction.³² In some jurisdictions the judgment is as conclusive as other judgments;³³ in others, the verdict or judgment is not conclusive on the par-

Self-executed statute

Court cannot make order or decree or grant any affirmative relief, but can only make a determination that levy is valid or that ownership belongs to claimant, and such determination releases sheriff from any liability arising out of his official acts from following the compulsion of the statute, and the statute is self-executed upon such determination.—Long Island Tinsmith Supply Corporation v. ties,³⁴ at least where the proceeding was instituted by the officer without the consent of claimant.³⁵

A judgment for claimant does not operate as a bar to an action of trespass for the tort committed in taking the property under the execution.³⁶ A judgment against claimant will bar not only an action against the officer,³⁷ but also one against a purchaser at the execution sale.³⁸ A verdict against claimant does not vest the property in him, although he becomes liable to the amount of its value.³⁹ Where a judgment by default is rendered against claimant, a sale thereafter by the officer is valid, although the default is afterward set aside and a trial had.⁴⁰

Where the levy is dismissed before trial, plaintiff in execution cannot proceed to the trial of the claim case without procuring a reversal of the judgment of dismissal.⁴¹ If the claim is withdrawn before the jury retire, the verdict is of no effect.⁴² The reversal of the judgment in the original action does not affect a verdict for the execution creditor previously rendered on claimant's issue.⁴³ An execution sale will not be enjoined on any ground which claimant might have urged in the claim case.⁴⁴

Persons bound. The determination does not affect the title to the property as between claimant and execution defendant, or the rights of third persons not parties to the claim proceeding;⁴⁵ but as between execution plaintiff and claimant it is conclusive in some states as to the liability of the property to the execution,⁴⁶ and, where the judgment is against claimant, as to the validity and binding force of the judgment in the principal action.⁴⁷ The sureties on the claim bond are deemed parties to the proceeding.⁴⁸

A defendant in execution who seeks the benefit of an interpleader bond will be bound as respects the valuation of the property in the interpleader proceeding.⁴⁹ Where several claimants have filed claims against a fund in the hands of the sheriff under a judgment, a verdict on an issue between two of the claimants will bind all.⁵⁰

Dismissal; nonsuit. The dismissal of a claim case by a court of competent jurisdiction is in effect a judgment against the claim.⁵¹ A dismissal of the claim for matters not affecting the merits does not preclude the right to again interpose the claim;⁵² in such case the dismissal does not of itself amount to an adjudication of the title to the property;⁵³ but where claimant has disposed of the property taken possession of under a forthcoming bond, and hence is precluded from interposing another claim, the judgment dismissing the claim becomes conclusive as to the title,⁵⁴ and claimant, having elected his remedy, is precluded from thereafter contesting the title.⁵⁵

son has resulted in a verdict finding the property subject to feri facias, a forthcoming bond given has been violated, and it does not appear that plaintiff in feri facias has elected to have a reseizure, should be dismissed on motion.⁵⁸

Relevy and sale under original judgment. After a judgment adverse to claimant, the property may be reseized and sold under the original judgment,⁵⁹ and the execution plaintiff cannot be compelled to pursue his remedy on claimant's bond.⁶⁰ Such relevy is not per se a waiver of a money judgment recovered in the claim proceedings,⁶¹ but after a judgment for the value of the property has been rendered against a claimant and satisfied out of his own property he should be credited with the proceeds of a subsequent sale of the property to which title was disputed.⁶²

§ 192. Liabilities on Claimants' Bonds

A claimant's liability on his bond is fixed by a final judgment against him. The claimant is liable for breach of his bond if he fails to deliver the property described therein at the time and place fixed thereby, unless there is a valid excuse for the default or ratification by, or estoppel of, the execution creditor; and if the bond contains other conditions the mere return of the property does not discharge it.

The liability of claimant on his bond is fixed by a final judgment against him by a court having jurisdiction,⁶³ and this is so even though the bond is not good as a statutory bond, if it is good as a common-law obligation.⁶⁴ If the court has no jurisdiction and the case is therefore dismissed, there is no liability on the bond.⁶⁵ Under appropriate statutory provision, liability may accrue by failure to file a statement of title within the time prescribed by statute.⁶⁶ A discharge in bankruptcy of the judgment debtor after the levy does not affect the right to recover on the bond where by statute the giving of the bond does not discharge the levy.⁶⁷ The sheriff cannot discharge or waive any of the terms of the bond so as to affect the interest of the plaintiff in feri facias without his consent.⁶⁸ Where the property in question was fraudulently transferred by the judgment debtor to a third person and by the latter to claimant, the failure of the assignee for creditors of the judgment debtor to attack the first fraudulent conveyance and cause it to be set aside does not defeat an action on the bond of claimant.⁶⁹

What constitutes breach. The condition of a bond that the goods levied on shall be forthcoming to answer the writ, in case the issue shall be determined against claimant and in favor of the execution creditor, is broken by failure to deliver the property at the time and place fixed by the bond,⁷⁰ unless excused by a showing that performance was made impossible,⁷¹ either by the act of the obligee in the bond,⁷² by interference of the law,⁷³ or by an act of God.⁷⁴ Where a taking under other process is relied on, it must be shown that such process was legally adequate⁷⁵ and superior to the execution originally levied.⁷⁶ The sufficiency and manner of delivery depend on the nature of the property.⁷⁷ In order that the surrender may discharge

A direction to the sheriff to retake goods in a store easily accessible to him constitutes a sufficient delivery; and, where the original levy was a range levy on horses and cattle, a direction to the sheriff to repossess himself of and retake the horses and cattle running at large on a range in the county is sufficient.—Willis v. Chowning, 46 S.W. 45, 18 Tex.Civ. App. 625.

Insufficient delivery

(1) The claimant's mere expression of a wish to deliver property which is a long distance away and in possession of the claimant's vendee is insufficient.—Garrity v. Thompson, 2 S.W. 750, 67 Tex. 1.

(2) A mere tender of a movable sorghum mill and evaporator which is ten or twelve miles away is insufficient.—Edwards v. Connolly, 61 Tex. 30.

the liability on the forthcoming bond, the property must be in as good condition as when it was received,⁷⁸ the delivery must be within the time fixed by the bond or statute,⁷⁹ and at the place fixed in the bond,⁸⁰ and the delivery must be in discharge of the particular bond.⁸¹ Delivery of part of the property is not sufficient.⁸²

Where the levying officer is the nominal obligee in the bond, his acceptance of the property in full satisfaction of the bond renders it functus officio and relieves the obligors from all liability thereunder,⁸³ but his acceptance of some other property does not so relieve the obligors⁸⁴ in the absence of ratification by, or estoppel of, the plaintiff in fieri facias.⁸⁵ Where the issue has been decided against claimant consumption of the property by him is a breach of the bond,⁸⁶ and it has been held that, where claimant has disposed of the property so that he could not produce it on demand, the bond is automatically breached,⁸⁷ notwithstanding no adjudication that the property is subject to the execution has been made.⁸⁸

A notice to surrender the property is unnecessary.⁸⁹

It is immaterial whether the judgment creditor consents to the return,⁹⁰ or whether a return made by a surety was with the consent of claimant.⁹¹

A return of the property does not of itself satisfy and discharge a bond containing other conditions.⁹²

§ 193. — Liabilities of Sureties

The surety's liability on a claimant's bond cannot be enforced until liability is fixed on the principal; whether the principal's confession of judgment fixes the surety's liability is in disagreement. A surety is not discharged by substitution of another bond without consent, by an extension or stay of execution, or by the fact that claimant is about to let his claim go by default.

Where, in a statutory proceeding to try rights of property, claimant's bond is filed, the court has been held to have jurisdiction over the person of a surety on such bond;⁹³ but the liability of the surety is dependent on that of his principal, and cannot be enforced until a liability is fixed on the principal.⁹⁴ Confession of judgment by the principal has been held to fix liability on the sureties,⁹⁵ but there is authority to the contrary.⁹⁶ A surety is liable even though the statute does not require sureties on the bond.⁹⁷ A surety on several bonds is liable to each creditor for a breach of the condition of the bond, although he may thereby be compelled to pay the value of the goods levied on several times.⁹⁸ Fraudulent representations inducing the sureties to sign the bond have been held to preclude liability.⁹⁹

That plaintiff in fieri facias bid for property was not a ratification of sheriff's act in receiving from claimant property other than that which was to be delivered under forthcoming bond, if plaintiff had notified sheriff on discovery thereof and declined further participation in sale, and he is not estopped from suing on bond because proceeds of sale remained in hands of levying officer.—Boyd v. Crews, supra.

Agent of execution creditor

The execution creditor is estopped to assert that the property returned was different from that seized under the levy, where the levying officer accepted the property, sold it under the execution, and paid the proceeds to an agent of the execution creditor who was directing the sale.—Anthony v. charged by substituting another bond, with other surety, without the consent of the other party.¹ Since, after final judgment on the bond, sureties become principal debtors, they are not discharged by an extension or stay of execution,² or by the fact that claimant is about to leave the state and let his claim go by default,³ or that plaintiff in a senior execution did not have the proceeds of the sale of the property under a junior execution applied to the senior execution.⁴

Liability on claim bonds may, in a few jurisdictions, be enforced summarily in the proceedings for trial of the right of property, but is more commonly enforced by action. In proceedings for such enforcement, adjudications have been made, under the various governing statutes, with respect to parties, defenses, pleading, evidence, instructions, the amount of recovery, the judgment and its enforcement, stay of proceedings, and the application of the proceeds.

In a few jurisdictions the liability of claimant and his sureties on the claim bond may be enforced summarily in the proceedings for the trial of the right of property,⁵ after the sheriff has returned the bond forfeited.⁶ The liability of claimant and his sureties is most usually enforced by action on the bond.⁷ In at least one state the execution plaintiff may maintain an action on a forthcoming bond in his own name,⁸ or in the name of the levying officer.⁹

Defenses. Defendant can set up no defense which would permit him to prove the very issue which it was incumbent on him to prove in the claim case;¹⁰ nor can he show that the jury found by their verdict that claimant was interested with defendant, and that the interest which the latter had on a settlement of accounts was nothing.¹¹ Claimant's engagement in his bond may preclude him from showing that the property really belonged to claimant or to others than the execution debtor,¹² or even to set up a right of exemption to the execution debtor.¹³ Claimant taking possession of the property cannot, without equitable ground, deny receiving the property described in the bond¹⁴ or dispute description in the bond concerning the amount of property under the pleadings.¹⁵ Claimant cannot question the sufficiency of the description under which the property was readvertised for sale after dismissal of the claim case, where it corresponds with the description in the levy and forthcoming bond.¹⁶ Payment by the execution defendant of the judgment against him after it was rendered is a defense to a proceeding for judgment on claimant's bond.¹⁷ An amendable defect in the form of the judgment in the claim case is not always a good defense to an action on the forthcoming bond.¹⁸ Mere interlineation is no defense,¹⁹ unless it appears that it was made after the execution of the bond and that an advantage or detriment to the parties was accomplished thereby.²⁰

Pleading. In a summary proceeding to enforce claimant's liability on his bond, ordinary pleadings are not required as in actions,²¹ and matters may be proved even though not pleaded, so long as the statutory procedure is followed.²² In an action on a claim bond, the complaint should clearly allege a failure to deliver.²³ It is only necessary to set out facts sufficient to show a breach of the conditions of the bond,²⁴ and to allege the value of the goods where the recovery is limited to such value.²⁵ It is not necessary to allege that the property was that of the execution debtor,²⁶ or that the execution is set out or attached as an exhibit.²⁷ Where the bond is void as a statutory bond, an amendment to show a cause of action on a common-law bond is proper.²⁸

An affidavit of defense has been held not necessary,²⁹ but a special plea must allege all the facts necessary to sustain it.³⁰

Evidence. Plaintiff must show that the property has been found subject to the execution, and either that a demand for it has been made and refused, or that it was not produced at the proper time and place.³¹ Claimant has the burden of accounting for his failure to surrender the property,³² and of explaining an apparent sale of it by him.³³ The bond itself is admissible in evidence.³⁴ The property described in claimant's forthcoming bond is prima facie what he received from the levying officer,³⁵ and in the absence of fraud, accident, mistake, or some other equitable ground claimant will not be allowed to prove that such property did not come into his possession.³⁶ Partial payments by defendant in execution are presumed to have been applied on the main indebtedness rather than on the liability of the obligor in the bond, in the absence of contrary evidence.³⁷ There is no presumption that the goods were worth as much as the amount due on the judgment.³⁸ Under a plea of payment defendant may introduce the return of the officer, showing a levy and sale, and money made thereby.³⁹ Where the obligor sold the property for his own benefit, evidence that the person conducting the sale was previously notified of the claim proceedings is admissible.⁴⁰

In determining damages for failure to return goods, the jury may consider the officer's previous estimate of the value of the goods, under some authorities,⁴¹ but it has also been held that such estimate furnishes no evidence of the true value of the property.⁴²

The weight and sufficiency of the evidence is governed by the general rules relating to such matters in other actions.⁴³

Judgment set aside

In suit on forthcoming bond given in claim case, judgment adjudicating the property subject will not authorize recovery, where, before filing of the suit, it has been set aside and contrary judgment rendered adjudicating the property not subject to the fieri facias.—Hicks v. the property in as good condition as he had received it is not objectionable because it described the property slightly differently from what the pleadings and evidence showed it to be.⁴⁴

Amount of recovery. The measure of recovery is fixed by the terms of the bond.⁴⁵ It has been held that, where claimant returns property in a damaged condition or returns only part of the property, the damage is the decrease in value since delivery to claimant, with interest,⁴⁶ even though the levying officer refuses the property as not complying with the bond and does not sell it.⁴⁷ If part of the property is returned and sold by the officer, the amount realized is a discharge pro tanto of the liability of the obligors,⁴⁸ regardless of its assessed value.⁴⁹ An execution plaintiff cannot sell a portion of the goods returned and recover on the bond for the portion which he refuses to sell.⁵⁰ If it appears that the property is owned jointly by claimant and the debtor, the recovery should be limited to the value of the debtor's interest.⁵¹ Damages assessed for delay have been held not collectable against a surety,⁵² but under other authority the surety is liable the same as for the value of the property.⁵³ Where plaintiff moves for judgment for the amount at which the property was appraised and a percentage thereof, it is error to render judgment for a greater sum.⁵⁴

Judgment and enforcement. A judgment for plaintiff on the bond must be for an ascertained amount,⁵⁵ on which interest is to be allowed from the date of the judgment.⁵⁶ In at least one jurisdiction the form of judgment is for the amount of the penalty to be released on payment of the ascertained damages.⁵⁷ Plaintiff is entitled to a satisfaction of his original judgment, with the interest on such judgment from its date, and interest on the damages from the time of the judgment giving damages.⁵⁸ Where execution is issued on a forfeited claim bond after claimant has paid costs in the claim proceeding, the court may protect him from a second payment of the costs under the execution.⁵⁹

Stay of proceedings. Where judgment has been rendered on an interpleader bond, the court will not stay proceedings until the determination of other feigned issues growing out of a levy on the same goods by other execution creditors, in order to relieve defendant from his liability on other interpleader bonds.⁶⁰

Application of proceeds. The proceeds of a judgment on a forthcoming bond should be applied on the execution, whether or not the judgment on which the execution issued was a lien on the property seized; but defendant in execution has no claim to the proceeds.⁶¹

§ 195. False, Fraudulent, Vexatious, or Frivolous Claims

A fraudulent claimant to whom the officer surrenders property levied on is liable for damages only to the officer against whom the execution creditor has a remedy. Equitable relief against an allegedly dilatory claim depends on a showing of claimant's inability to respond in money damages.

If a third person wrongfully and fraudulently claims property levied on, and the officer surrenders the property to him because of such claim, the execution creditor cannot sue such third person for the resulting damage, since the latter is liable only

A. NATURE, NECESSITY, AND REQUISITES

§ 196. Definition, Nature, and Distinctions

An execution sale is a sale of property by a sheriff as an officer holding process. It has been distinguished from judicial and forced sales.

An execution sale is a sale of property by a sheriff or his deputy, by virtue of his authority as an officer holding process.⁶⁴ Where the power to sell is derived from an agreement of the parties, the sale is not a sheriff's sale, as that term is used in the meaning of an execution sale.⁶⁵ The statutes in at least one state contemplate two kinds of execution sales, the sale absolute and the sale subject to redemption.⁶⁶

The sale under an execution is to satisfy the lien created by the execution, and no other.⁶⁷

Judicial sale distinguished. While an execution sale is the result of judicial proceedings in that it must be supported by a judgment or decree,⁶⁸ an execution sale is to be distinguished from a judicial sale in that in an execution sale the officer who sells gets his authority by virtue of the execution and is guided in the sale by the law rather than by the court, whereas in a judicial sale, the court controls, acting through the person appointed to make the sale as through an agent.⁶⁹ An execution sale requires no confirmation unless the statute so provides, whereas a judicial sale is not, as a rule, complete until confirmed by the court;⁷⁰ further, an execution sale is based on a judgment for a particular sum of money, a judicial sale on an order to sell specific property.⁷¹ According to some authorities, however, the term "judicial sale," at least as used in particular statutes, embraces an execution sale;⁷² and under the particular practice, a sale on execution may partake of the character of a judicial sale.⁷³

Distinctions between execution and judicial sales in connection with the statute of frauds are considered in the C.J.S. Title Frauds, Statute of § 123, also 27 C.J. p 225 notes 54-64.

Court's power limited to setting aside

In execution sales, court gives no directions concerning property to be levied on and usually has no control over sale beyond power to set it aside for noncompliance with statutory provisions governing it.

Notwithstanding the foregoing distinctions, it is advisable, in considering the law relating to execution sales, to read in conjunction the law relating to judicial sales, since in most cases it cannot in principle or reason matter whether the sale is made by some officer, as the agent of the court, or by the sheriff, as the agent of the law to make the sale and enforce the payment of money due from defendant to plaintiff.⁷⁴

Forced sale. A sale on execution is not synonymous with a forced sale.⁷⁵

§ 197. Necessity for, Conditions Precedent, and Impediments to Sale

a. Necessity

b. Conditions precedent and impediments

a. Necessity

The sheriff must sell the property taken, except where the levy is on money, or, it has been held, on a cause of action; and he may withdraw the property from sale if a responsible offer to pay the debt is made by the debtor, or for his benefit.

After the sheriff has levied, it is his duty to sell the property taken;⁷⁶ he cannot, for instance, deliver it to plaintiff in satisfaction of his claim,⁷⁷ except in case of a levy on money.⁷⁸ In enforcing an execution against a cause of action, the sheriff has been held to have discretion either to sell it or to proceed to collect it; but this discretion can be controlled by the court.⁷⁹ If, during the progress of a sale, the debtor, or any other responsible person for his benefit, offers to pay the debt, the sheriff may accept the offer and withdraw the property from sale.⁸⁰

A suit in equity is not the appropriate remedy to enforce an execution levy, since the power of the sheriff to enforce it by sale is ample.⁸¹

b. Conditions Precedent and Impediments

An execution sale is unauthorized unless all conditions precedent, such as a valid execution and levy, have been fulfilled. Satisfaction of the judgment, and appointment of a receiver and delivery of the property to him, bar an execution sale, as does a prior attachment of personalty, although not of realty.

To authorize a sale, there must be a valid execution,⁸² and, as indicated supra § 91, a valid levy thereunder. A sale pending a statutory claim to the property by a third person is invalid;⁸³ but a forthcoming bond does not prevent a sale,⁸⁴ nor does a former void sale under a dormant execution prevent a sale on the same day under a valid execution.⁸⁵ The effect of a stay is considered supra § 141; the effect of an injunction, supra § 163.

It is not necessary to make a demand for payment of the judgment prior to the issuance of an order of sale,⁸⁶ nor is it necessary, as a condition precedent to an execution sale, to pay off a mortgage on the debtor's property.⁸⁷

Satisfaction of judgment. If the judgment has been satisfied before any sale is made under the execution, the power to make the sale is lost,⁸⁸ and a sale thereafter is, under some authorities, void,⁸⁹ although in this connection should be observed the varying holdings as to the effect of satisfaction of the judgment on the title of bona fide purchasers, as set out infra § 285. The debtor is entitled to pay the judgment and costs and thereby stop further proceedings at any time before the sheriff has declared an unconditional sale.⁹⁰

Where there is only a part payment of the judgment, a sale to realize the balance due is valid.⁹¹ However, a sheriff has no right to sell for the purpose of collecting his fees after due notice of the settlement and discharge of the judgment.⁹²

Prior attachment. An attachment of personal property in favor of one creditor has been held a bar to an execution sale in favor of another,⁹³ even though it is sought to make the execution sale subject to the prior lien of the attachment.⁹⁴ In the case of realty, it has been held proper for a creditor to proceed with his execution sale and take the risk that the earlier attachment will not be perfected by a judgment and levy.⁹⁵

Appointment of receiver. After the appointment of a receiver and the delivery of the property to him, a sale of the property cannot be had under an execution, even though it was levied before the appointment.⁹⁶

Leave of court. Under at least one statute, a sheriff's sale of rights and credits cannot be had without leave of the court.⁹⁷

Waiver of certificates of lien. Where certificates of liens against the property, as provided for by statute, are waived by plaintiff and purchaser, it is not error for the sheriff to proceed with the sale without them.⁹⁸

Death of party. The effect of the death of a party on the right to sell is considered supra § 65 and infra § 208.

§ 198. Statutory Provisions

The law in force at the time of the execution sale

generally controls. Controlling statutes have variously been, or not been, given a retroactive effect.

As a general rule, the law in force at the time of the sale of property on execution will control the proceedings of the officer conducting the sale, and not the law in force at the time the judgment was rendered,⁹⁹ although there is authority to the effect that the sale on execution on a judgment in a suit on contract must be governed by the law in force when the contract was made.¹ There is no vested right to a particular form of remedy, and if a substituted remedy is given which does not abridge the usefulness of that existing at the time the right accrued, there is no cause for complaint.²

Retroactive effect. The provisions of a code as to sale have been held not to apply where the judgment was rendered prior to its taking effect;³ and a statute requiring execution sales to be advertised in a newspaper has no application to sales made prior to its enactment;⁴ but a statute relating to the sale of realty under execution has been held to govern such sale whether the execution was issued on a judgment rendered prior or subsequent to its enactment.⁵

§ 199. Authority of Officer to Sell

An execution sale must be made by an officer having the proper authority, and who is not a party to the execution. An officer who has properly levied during his term of office may generally sell thereafter; but there is authority to the contrary as to sales of realty.

An officer making a sale under execution acts solely by virtue of the statutory authority conferred, which must be strictly pursued; and where such power does not exist nothing passes by the sale.⁶ It has been said that the judgment and execution prove the authority.⁷

A sale under an execution should be made by an officer of the county in which the property is situated.⁸ A sale under an execution directed merely to the sheriff as such, without naming him, may be made either by the sheriff himself or by his deputy;⁹ but one officer has no power to sell under an execution directed to another officer.¹⁰

The officer must be in possession, or entitled to possession, of chattels to be sold,¹¹ but need not be in actual possession of real estate to be sold.¹² An officer has power to sell even though only one of several executions under which the sale is made is valid,¹³ or at least the sale is voidable only, rather than void.¹⁴ It has been held that where the officer dies before sale, the land may be sold by his executor or administrator;¹⁵ but there is authority to the contrary.¹⁶

Officer as party. Under the principle of public policy which makes it unlawful for a sheriff to levy an execution issued in his favor, it is unlawful for an officer or his deputy to conduct a sale under an execution to which he is a party,¹⁷ as where he has become the owner of the judgment.¹⁸

Expiration of term of office. Except where otherwise provided by statute, the general rule is that where a sufficient levy of execution is made on property during the life of a writ and prior to the expiration of the term of office of the officer to whom it is delivered, such officer is empowered to make a sale of the property so levied on after his term has expired.¹⁹ In the case of personal property especially, the general rule is that the sale may and should be made by the officer who levied the writ, the reason given being that the officer, by virtue of his levy, has acquired an interest in the property;²⁰ but under a statute providing that process remaining with the officer unexecuted at the expiration of his term may be executed by his successor, where a sheriff has made a levy on personalty under an execution, his successor in office may complete the sale.²¹

Since the levy of an execution on real estate does not vest any special property in the officer making the levy, the rule has been laid down that the powers of his successor in office are concurrent with those of the officer making the levy with respect to the sale of such property, or, at least, that the successor may carry out the sale.²² Further, according to some authorities, in the case of real property the new officer is the only proper party to make the sale and execute the conveyance, and a sale by the officer whose term has expired is a nullity,²³ unless he makes the sale under a venditioni exponas directed to him.²⁴ However, according to other authorities, only the outgoing officer has power to complete the execution by the sale and conveyance of the land levied on.²⁵

It has been held that an ex-officer and the incumbent cannot advertise, sell, and make a deed jointly.²⁶

§ 200. — Venditioni Exponas

- a. Definition and nature
- b. Office of writ and right thereto
- c. Necessity
- d. Form

a. Definition and Nature

A venditioni exponas is a writ commanding the sheriff to sell property which he has taken in execution by virtue of a fieri facias and has not yet sold. It is considered by some authorities as in its nature an execution, but is more in the nature of an order requiring the sheriff to proceed to the execution of the former writ.

A venditioni exponas is a writ directed to an officer, such as the sheriff, commanding him to sell goods or chattels, and, in some states, lands, which he has taken in execution by virtue of a fieri facias, and which remain unsold.²⁷ It is a writ of compulsion, not of authorization, and gives the officer no authority not previously possessed by him.²⁸

The writ is not separate from the fieri facias, but a part of it,²⁹ and derives its authority therefrom.³⁰ The execution and levy constitute the predicate of the venditioni exponas, and the latter rests on the judgment, as do the former.³¹

Although it has been held that the writ of venditioni exponas is in its nature an execution,³² and that it may be a fieri facias for the residue of the debt when the goods taken are not sufficient to satisfy the whole,³³ it is more in the nature of a mandate or order requiring the sheriff to proceed to the execution of the former writ, which is still regarded as the foundation of his proceedings.³⁴

Alias execution compared. As to the property on which a levy has been made, a venditioni exponas is in its nature and operation an alias execution.³⁵

Indeed, an alias execution performs the office of a writ of venditioni exponas in some jurisdictions,³⁶ although not in others.³⁷

Distringas. Under the old practice when the sheriff had gone out of office, a distringas issued rather than a venditioni exponas.³⁸

b. Office of Writ and Right Thereto

The office of a venditioni exponas is to compel the sale of property previously seized, and the judgment creditor is entitled to the writ whenever the officer who has the duty of selling neglects or refuses to do so.

The office of a venditioni exponas is to sell that which has been already seized, in order to satisfy the judgment and costs on which the execution issued,³⁹ and the same is the case with any subsequent venditioni exponas that may issue.⁴⁰ In other words, the office of the writ is to command the officer to proceed when he returns the execution showing that he has not made a sale of the property levied on as required by the writ.⁴¹ Hence a sale by an officer acting under a writ of venditioni exponas is null and void in a case where no fieri facias has been issued,⁴² where the property sold has not been levied on,⁴³ where the levy is void,⁴⁴ or where the judgment has been satisfied or merged in another judgment.⁴⁵

The writ of venditioni exponas is available for the sale of property where, because of the shortness of the time for return, sale cannot be made under the writ of fieri facias.⁴⁶

Right of judgment creditor. Where an officer whose duty it is to sell property seized to satisfy an execution omits, neglects, or refuses to make sale thereof, according to law, the creditor whose debt or demand the property was seized to satisfy may have a writ of venditioni exponas to compel the officer to discharge his duty and sell the property;⁴⁷ if the clerk refuses to issue the writ, the party may without previous notice move the court to direct the clerk to issue it.⁴⁸ The right to the writ is not cut off by the failure of the officer to make his return on the first day of the term.⁴⁹

Where the interest of the debtor in land has been sold under a venditioni exponas, an alias venditioni exponas will not be allowed to be issued against the same property while the first sale stands.⁵⁰

c. Necessity

* The writ of venditioni exponas is not ordinarily needed to justify a sale, and is superfluous if the officer is willing to proceed.

Since the writ of venditioni exponas is only a direction to perform a duty which already exists, and gives the sheriff no additional authority, the writ is not ordinarily needed to justify a sale,⁵¹ at least where the return day has not gone by;⁵² but the effect of some statutes has been to require the issuance of a venditioni exponas in order to warrant the sale of real property or of particular interests therein,⁵³ and it has also been held that, after a levy on personal property and discharge of a rule for an interpleader, the proper course is for plaintiff to take out a venditioni exponas.⁵⁴

Issuance of the writ is superfluous if the officer is willing to proceed to sell.⁵⁵

d. Form

The writ of venditioni exponas should make the proper recitals; but clerical errors are not fatal.

The writ of venditioni exponas should recite the former writ and return, and command the sheriff to make sale of the property seized and remaining unsold.⁵⁶ It must recite the issuance of an execution and the return;⁵⁷ but it need not designate by name the county or district in which the land to be sold lies.⁵⁸ It may contain a fieri facias clause so as to compel a sale of the property levied on and authorize a levy on other property sufficient to satisfy the judgment;⁵⁹ and if the writ omits a command to levy on additional property the sale thereunder of additional property not before levied on conveys no title.⁶⁰

§ 201. Conduct and Mode of Sale Generally

- a. General rules
- b. Designation of property
- c. Sale as realty or personalty
- d. Encumbered property

a. General Rules

An execution sale should be conducted in conformity with statute and in a manner which will secure the best price. The officer who sells acts on behalf of the debtor as well as the creditor, and must exercise his discretion fairly for the benefit of all concerned.

An execution sale should be so conducted as to promote competition and secure the best price.⁶³ All statutory requirements relating to the sale must be observed,⁶⁴ the sale otherwise being void.⁶⁵ It has been held necessary,⁶⁶ although sufficient,⁶⁷ for the execution sale to be conducted substantially as prescribed by the notice of sale and in accordance with the decree.

Duties and powers of officer selling. Although the duties of the officer selling are ministerial in nature,⁶⁸ he nevertheless has some discretionary power.⁶⁹ Such discretion must be fairly and impartially exercised for the benefit of all concerned,⁷⁰ and an abuse thereof will be relieved against in equity, although there may have been a formal compliance with all statutory requirements.⁷¹

While the officer who sells should obey all reasonable directions of the execution plaintiff,⁷² he is not a mere agent or servant of the judgment creditor;⁷³ he is, rather, the agent⁷⁴ or trustee⁷⁵ of, or at least under a duty to protect,⁷⁶ the debtor as well as the creditor.

The sheriff is not authorized to determine a judicial question as to the debtor's interest in the real estate offered for sale; his authority is only to offer the interest of the debtor, whatever such interest may be.⁷⁷

Employment of auctioneer. As a general rule, the sheriff may employ an auctioneer and make him his agent to sell the property and collect the proceeds;⁷⁸ but it has been held that he cannot employ an auctioneer at the expense of the owner

Announcement by auctioneer; property excepted from sale

Where an auctioneer at a sale of land under fieri facias made an oral announcement within the actual and apparent scope of his authority, all persons present were bound by it if they could have heard it had they been listening; so an auctioneer at a sale of a farm could publicly announce in the presence of bidders that a silo on the farm was excepted, and would not be sold, where the advertisement, although it referred to the various structures on the farm, contained no reference to the

of the property seized, in the absence of authority from such owner.⁷⁹

b. Designation of Property

The property being sold under execution must be clearly designated.

It is a cardinal rule, in an execution sale of real property, that the property sold should be designated with reasonable certainty,⁸⁰ and therefore a sale of an undesignated part of a large tract of land, there being no means of distinguishing the portion sold from the residue, is void.⁸¹ Personal property to be sold must be pointed out to the bidders and specifically designated, and it must not be left to any future act to ascertain what property was actually sold.⁸²

c. Sale as Realty or Personalty

Personalty may not be sold, under execution, in the manner prescribed for the sale of realty, and vice versa. Realty and personalty should not be sold together indiscriminately.

An execution sale of personal property as real property, or vice versa, is invalid.⁸³ At common law, chattel interests in real leaseholds are always sold as personalty, and, in the absence of statutory provisions, a sale on execution of such interests in accordance with the statutory provisions for the sale of real estate is void;⁸⁴ by statute, however, chattels real may be required to be sold as real property.⁸⁵

Lumping realty and personalty. It is irregular to sell real and personal estate together indiscriminately.⁸⁶

d. Encumbered Property

Apart from statutory requirements, an execution sale need not be made expressly subject to prior encumbrances, and the sheriff need not search the records to ascertain whether any exist; but it is not improper for him to give notice of such encumbrances.

Except where otherwise provided by statute,⁸⁷ a sale under execution need not be made expressly subject to prior encumbrances,⁸⁸ although there is no impropriety in the sheriff's giving notice of such encumbrances.⁸⁹ He is not bound to search the public records to ascertain whether the property is encumbered by prior liens, nor is he bound to sell such property by virtue of any mortgage, but he may sell, subject to all encumbrances, under the execution.⁹⁰ It is no fraud on the part of the holder of several judgments to sell under a junior judgment, where he notifies bidders of the older liens.⁹¹

All bidders must be on the same footing at an execution sale with respect to whether, as far as the record discloses, an unencumbered title will be acquired by the sale;⁹² and if there is a real doubt as to the encumbrances which will be discharged by the sale the matter should, where reasonably possible, be determined preliminarily,⁹³ as, for example, by a declaratory judgment.⁹⁴

§ 202. — Sale of Less than Whole Interest, and Excessive Sale

The debtor's entire interest in the property should be sold, and no more than his interest; but a sale of a lesser interest than he owns has been held not void. No more of his property should be sold than is necessary to satisfy the demand, although a sale will not be avoided for an unappreciable excess. A sale of less property than was levied on is commonly held valid, but an estate larger than that embraced in the levy cannot be sold.

On an execution sale of property, the general rule is that the officer should sell the entire interest whereof defendant in execution is seized;⁹⁵ thus, if defendant owns the entire fee of land levied on, the officer cannot sell an undivided interest therein.⁹⁶ It has been held, however, that a sale is not void merely because the officer sells a smaller interest in the property than the execution defendant really owns.⁹⁷

Sale of debtor's interest only. Where two or more individuals own undivided interests in property,⁹⁸ as where there are two tenants in common of a chattel,⁹⁹ and the property is seized under an execution against one of them, the officer who conducts the sale should sell only the share of the judgment debtor; the sale of all the property would, it has been held, constitute him a trespasser ab initio.¹

On an execution against a partner under which partnership assets have been seized, the officer should sell only the interest of the partner.²

Where an execution against a mortgagor has been levied on mortgaged chattels, the officer should sell only the interest of the mortgagor.³

Sufficiency to satisfy demand. An officer should not sell more of the debtor's property than a sound judgment would dictate to be sufficient to satisfy the demand, provided a part can be reasonably and conveniently detached from the residue of the property and be sold separately;⁴ a sale of additional land⁵ or personal property⁶ after enough has been sold to satisfy the judgment is unauthorized. A sale of property so disproportioned in value to the amount to be raised as to create a presumption of fraud or reckless indifference has been held void⁷ or voidable.⁸ Where the amount of property sold in excess is not appreciable, the sale will not be avoided on that account.⁹

A sale of less property than was levied on is valid, under several authorities,¹⁰ although it has been held that, where less land is sold than has been levied on and appraised, the sale is void.¹¹ Under a levy on a whole lot, the sheriff may lawfully sell an undivided interest in the lot.¹²

An estate larger than that embraced in the levy cannot be sold.¹³

§ 203. — Sale under Several Executions

Several executions against the same defendant, although not against different defendants, may ordinarily be satisfied by a single sale of realty.

One sale of real estate may be made to satisfy several executions against the same defendant,¹⁵ except where the executions are governed by different laws as to the terms of sale;¹⁶ but property cannot be sold at one time, under different writs, against different execution defendants.¹⁷

§ 204. — Public or Private Sale

It is generally required, under statutes, that a sale under execution be at public auction.

Although at common law the sheriff may exercise his discretion as to the manner of sale and is not required to sell at auction,¹⁸ it is generally held, under statutes, that a sheriff has no authority to make a private sale under execution, and that the sale must be at public auction,¹⁹ unless all the parties consent to a private sale.²⁰

§ 205. — Order of Offering for Sale

In the absence of statute, or agreement of the parties, unencumbered property should be sold before encumbered, and personalty before realty. Under some statutes the execution debtor may direct the order of sale.

Unencumbered property of the judgment debtor which is subject to execution should generally be resorted to first.²¹ Where lands subject to a judgment lien have been alienated at different times, they must be sold under execution to satisfy such judgment in the inverse order of the dates of the former alienations thereof.²² Under some statutes, before any parcel of real estate can be sold, its rents and profits for a specified term of years must first be offered, and it must not be sold unless its rents and profits for such term will not bring sufficient to satisfy the writ.²³ A statute may give the judgment debtor the right to direct the order in which his property is to be sold;²⁴ and the parties may by agreement select which portion of property levied on shall be sold on the day of sale, and postpone the sale as to the remainder.²⁵

Sale of personalty before realty. Under most statutes, where both personal and real property are seized under execution, the personal property should first be sold,²⁶ although a sale of realty where personalty exists has been held not void.²⁷ However, under statutes giving the judgment debtor the right to direct the order in which different parcels of property levied on shall be sold under execution, he may choose whether his realty or personalty shall be first offered for sale; and the officer has no authority to sell except in the order that the debtor directs.²⁸ Further, although personal property should be sold first, the execution debtor may

A purchaser at an execution sale is bound by the terms and conditions of sale, unless they create liabilities not imposed by law.

Purchasers at an execution sale are bound, as to terms of payment, by the terms announced by the sheriff at the time of the sale;³¹ but the execution debtor cannot object to a change in the terms which is more favorable to him.³² The sheriff cannot impose on a purchaser any terms other than those imposed by the law; if he undertakes by any conditions of sale to vary the relative positions of the parties and to create liabilities which the law does not impose, the purchaser is not bound thereby.³³

§ 207. Place of Sale

- a. In general
- b. Real property
- c. Personal property

a. In General

Compliance with statutes relating to the sale of property is essential to the validity of such sale.

As a general rule, the sale should be made at the place stated in the notice of sale, and is invalid unless it is made at that place,³⁴ or so near by as to be in plain view of the place advertised.³⁵

In most jurisdictions, the place of sale is regulated by statute, and compliance therewith is essential,³⁶ as these statutes are generally held to be mandatory,³⁷ although a sale by consent of the parties at a different place is valid where there is no intention to defraud and there are no other liens on the property at the time of the sale.³⁸ However, in some jurisdictions the place of sale is left to the discretion of the officer;³⁹ but this discretion should be so exercised as to secure the most advantageous sale,⁴⁰ and where it appears that an unusual place has been selected and the property sold for less than its value the sale may be set aside;⁴¹ and in one early case it was held that the judgment should fix the place for the sale of real estate.⁴²

Sale at different places. Where the character and situation of the property, and the interests of the parties require it, the officer may, in his sound discretion and in good faith, advertise and sell at different places.⁴³

Real property must be sold ordinarily at the door of the courthouse of the county in which the property is situated.

Under statutes in many jurisdictions, real property must be sold at the door of the courthouse of the county in which the property is situated,⁴⁴ and a sale at any other place is, as a general rule, invalid.⁴⁵ So a sale by a United States marshal must be made at the door of the county courthouse of the county where the land is situated, pursuant to the state law,⁴⁶ and cannot be made before the door of the federal courthouse.⁴⁷ If another building is temporarily used as a courthouse, a sale may be made at such place,⁴⁸ and it has been held that it should be sold at such place rather than at the location of the old courthouse,⁴⁹ but where the courthouse has been burned, and no other substituted, the sale may be made at the burnt courthouse or in full view thereof.⁵⁰ However, in the absence of a statute regulating the place of sale, land may be sold at such place as, in the sound discretion of the sheriff, he may judge best for the persons concerned,⁵¹ and the sale need not be made on the premises,⁵² or in a public place.⁵³

Two courthouses. If there are two courthouses in a county, the sale may take place at the door of either.⁵⁴

Sale in another county or judicial district. Except where otherwise provided by statute,⁵⁵ the sale of real property must be had in the county where it is situated,⁵⁶ and this applies to sales by a United States marshal.⁵⁷ It is well settled that a sale in one county or judicial district, of property located in another county or district, is at least voidable,⁵⁸ and in many cases it has been held to be absolutely void, and open to collateral attack.⁵⁹ In the absence of a statutory provision relating thereto, if land is located in two counties or districts, the sale is valid as to the part within the county or district where it is sold but is void as to the remainder.⁶⁰ Where a new county has been created but has not been organized, a sale of land in the new county may be made in the mother county.⁶¹

A sale of personal property should be in the district in which it was taken under the execution and it is generally required that such property be present at the time and place of sale so that it can be readily examined by the bidders.

A sale of personal property should be made in the county, town, or district in which the property was taken under the execution;⁶² and it is generally required that personal property sold under execution shall be present at the time and place of sale so that it can be readily examined by the bidders;⁶³ and where the property is susceptible of being exhibited, the nature of the premises or the remoteness thereof is no excuse for not having it present at the sale.⁶⁴ It is not always necessary, however, that the property should be in the immediate view of the bidders, provided it is near by and an opportunity for inspection is given;⁶⁵ and it has been held, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, that under special circumstances a valid sale, if it is in other respects fairly conducted, may be made in the entire absence of the property,⁶⁶ as where the nature of the property prevents its being exhibited.⁶⁷ In some jurisdictions an exception has been made to the general rule when all the parties interested have consented to the sale taking place in the absence of the property.⁶⁸

Sale as void or voidable. By the weight of authority a sale of personal property not within the view of the bidders is void⁶⁹ and confers no title on the purchaser, as shown infra § 300. There are, however, authorities which hold such sales merely

§ 208. Time of Sale

- a. In general
- b. At time advertised; premature sale
- c. On or after return day
- d. After death of judgment debtor

a. In General

The time for selling property under execution is now generally regulated by statutes and compliance therewith is essential to a valid sale.

At common law the time for selling property under execution rested in the discretion of the officer,⁷² but in many jurisdictions the time is now fixed by statutes which must be complied with,⁷³ as such statutes are usually held to be mandatory,⁷⁴ and a sale after the statutory time, or at a time other than the one fixed by the statute, is void,⁷⁵ unless made by the consent of the parties.⁷⁶ Where the statute provides that a sale of personal property shall be made within a certain number of days after seizure, the officer loses his claim to the property by a failure to sell within the time prescribed.⁷⁷ Under some statutes the sale may be made at any time during the statutory period of the lien of the judgment;⁷⁸ but where a statute provides that no execution can be issued or proceedings had on any judgment after a given number of years from the rendition thereof, an execution issued and levied within that time may be enforced by a sale thereafter.⁷⁹

Under other statutory provisions, sales of land under execution are required to be made on certain designated days of the terms of court of the county in which the land is situate, and a sale made at any other time is invalid.⁸⁰ The rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that within the statutory limitations the time of sale under an execution is a matter within the discretion of the officer, and the sale will not be vacated if ordinary prudence is shown in the exercise of the discretion.⁸¹ It has been held, however, that due diligence should be used in making the sale within a reasonable time after seizure, and that a delay for an unreasonable time in making a sale, especially where it is caused by execution plaintiff, will impair the lien of the execution, as shown supra § 135.

Hour of sale. In some states the statute fixes the hour at which, or the hours between which, a sheriff's sale should take place, and such provisions must be complied with⁸² or the sale will be void;⁸³ but a sale set for a certain hour may be made at any time before the expiration of the hour; for example, a sale fixed at eleven o'clock may be made at any time between eleven and twelve o'clock.⁸⁴

Independent of statute a sale is not invalid, in the absence of fraud or unfair practice, because the Effect of delay

At common law, any delay in an execution sale deprived the execution of its force until restored by a countermand, and if a second execution were levied in the meantime, the former must be postponed, but the rigid rule of the common law has been departed from.—*In re C. Generally, execution creditor has absolute control of time of sale of goods levied on.—Petition of Hoopes, 5 A.2d 655, 1 Terry 126, sustaining 5 A.2d 653, 1 Terry 120.

Construction of statutes

(1) Date of "issuance of execution" within statute limiting time for sale of property on execution is date of delivery of execution to marshal.—Guterman v. Auerbach, 274 N.Y.S. 605, 152 Misc. 640, affirmed 271 N.Y.S. 1067, 242 App.Div. 614, motion denied 195 N.E. 225, 266 N.Y. 612, affirmed 196 N.E. 559, 267 N.Y. 521.

(2) No specific time need elapse between date of levy on land and date of sale under writ of fieri facias.—Smith v. Ford, 161 A. 214, 5 W.W.Harr., Del., 175.

hour of sale is fixed as between certain hours,⁸⁵ or at an unusual hour.⁸⁶

Sunday or holiday. An execution sale cannot take place on Sunday,⁸⁷ but it may take place on a nonjudicial day, since such a sale is not a judicial act.⁸⁸

Presumption. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the sale was made at the proper time.⁸⁹

b. At Time Advertised; Premature Sale

A sale by an officer prior to the time at which he is authorized by statute to make a sale is invalid; and a sale made at a time other than that advertised should ordinarily be set aside.

The sale should be made on the day and at the hour stated in the advertisement,⁹⁰ and it has been held that a sale made at a time other than that stated in the advertisement may or should be set aside,⁹¹ especially where it is accompanied by circumstances of fraud.⁹²

Premature sales. A sale of property under execution by an officer prior to the time at which he is authorized by statute to make a sale is invalid,⁹³ and this has been held to be true of a sale made before the time advertised,⁹⁴ especially where it is accompanied by circumstances of fraud.⁹⁵

Perishable property. Under statutes requiring a designated number of days' notice to be given of the sale of property under execution, an exception is generally made in the case of perishable property.⁹⁶

c. On or after Return Day

Property seized before the return day of the writ may ordinarily be sold after the return day, although in some jurisdictions a distinction is drawn between real and personal property in the application of this rule.

A sale made on the return day is valid.⁹⁷ So, also, as a general rule if property is seized under an execution on⁹⁸ or before⁹⁹ the return day of the writ, the officer may proceed to sell after the return day without new process, especially where the sheriff has been interrupted by an injunction issued at the instance of the judgment debtor,¹ but if the levy is not made during the life of the writ a sale after the return day is void.²

In some jurisdictions a distinction is made between sales of personal property and sales of land, it being held that a valid sale of land cannot be made after the return day of the writ, at least without a venditioni exponas,³ on the ground that the seizure of personal property vests in the officer a qualified property in the thing seized which is only

Moratorium

Where writ was issued on March 17, 1937, and a debt moratorium was granted to defendant expiring June 5, 1937, and property was sold at public sale by sheriff on July 7, 1937, writ of fieri facias had not expired, where it was good for seventy days, as against contention that writ had expired and that sale thereunder was invalid.—Williams v. Bush, La. App., 184 So. 583.

In Pennsylvania, goods may be sold after the return day, the levy having been made prior thereto, provided the delay is reasonable, unavoidable, and not used as a mere method of establishing a continuing lien.—Miksch v. Sheedy, 18 Lehigh Co L.J. 366.

23 C.J. p 626 note 26.

Term altered to later date

Where term of court to which writ of execution is returnable is afterward altered by law to a later date, writ remains in force until such later date, and sale of land made after original return day, but prior to altered date, is valid, and divests title out of judgment debtor.—Bass v. Albright, Tex.Civ.App., 59 S.W.2d 891, error refused.

divested by the sale, while in the case of real property he has only a right to sell which expires with the return day of the writ.⁴ By the weight of authority, however, a sale of real property had after the return day is valid where the levy was made before the return day,⁵ provided it is made before the life of the writ expires under the statute.⁶

Where execution was issued and levied in the lifetime of defendant, a sale not made until after such defendant's death is ordinarily not void.

In most jurisdictions a sale under an execution issued and levied in the lifetime of defendant, which is not made until after such defendant's death, is valid,⁷ or at least is not void,⁸ provided, in some jurisdictions, notices of the time and place of sale are given in the debtor's lifetime,⁹ but, in some jurisdictions, the sheriff cannot proceed further with the sale, in such a case, without a revivor.¹⁰ Statutory authority to levy after the death of the debtor where the writ is delivered before his death includes the power to sell after his death.¹¹

d. Effect of adjournment or irregularity

a. In General

The postponement of an execution sale is ordinarily within the discretion of the officer holding the sale, but it is a legal, and not an arbitrary, discretion.

Although there is authority to the effect that, in the absence of statutory authority, the officer cannot postpone or adjourn the sale,¹² as a general rule the officer holding an execution has power to postpone or adjourn a sale of the property levied on,¹³ especially where he does so by the consent of the parties.¹⁴ This power, except in so far as it is limited by statute,¹⁵ rests in the discretion of the officer;¹⁶ but it is a legal discretion, to be justified by the exigencies of the situation, and not an arbitrary preference,¹⁷ and should be exercised with impartial regard as to the interests of all parties concerned.¹⁸ An agreement by him to postpone the sale, which is inconsistent with his duties in the premises, is illegal and void.¹⁹ The power vested in a selling officer to adjourn a sale cannot be delegated by him to the attorney of either party.²⁰

By direction of plaintiff in execution. In some jurisdictions the officer should adjourn the sale when so directed by plaintiff in execution.²¹ If an unauthorized person orders the officer to postpone the sale, the creditor must acquiesce therein before the sale.²²

Effect of injunction. Where an officer is enjoined from making a sale as at first advertised, he has no authority to adjourn the sale to a different date during the pendency of the injunction.²³

Time and place. The sheriff, in making an adjournment, may, in his discretion, change not only the time but the place of sale,²⁴ provided he changes it to a place which he might have appointed in the first instance as the place of sale.²⁵

b. Propriety

A postponement of an execution sale is generally proper whenever it cannot be completed on the day on which it is begun, or where for want of bidders or other cause, it appears that the property will be sold for an inadequate price, or for any other statutory reason.

A postponement or adjournment is proper whenever the sale cannot be completed on the day on which it is begun,²⁶ or where there have been irregularities in the proceedings prior to the sale,²⁷ or where, for want of bidders or other cause, it appears that the property will be sold for an inadequate price.²⁸ However, a statute authorizing a postponement on the ground of want of bidders does not authorize postponement merely because only one bidder is present where he is willing to bid a fair sum equal to the amount of the demand;²⁹ although it is otherwise where there are no bystanders and the only bidder is the execution creditor.³⁰

It is not "good cause," as the term is used in a statute, for postponement, that the officer is unofficially advised of the claim of a third person,³¹ particularly where the officer is notified of an application to the court for a postponement, and presumably knows of its refusal,³² but where the adjournment may be made for "good cause" it seems that the direction of plaintiff's attorney may be a "good cause,"³³ and the fact that his attorney agrees with claimant to postpone the sale does not affect the validity of the sale, where neither the purchaser nor the officer knew thereof before the sale, although they are informed thereof before the purchase money is paid.³⁴ Where the purchaser refuses to comply with his bid, the sheriff may, under statutory authorization, treat the sale as a nullity and postpone the sale to another day, and this is true where plaintiff is himself the purchaser and refuses to pay the costs.³⁵

The sale will not be postponed on the application of persons not parties to the record.³⁶

c. Notice

Ordinarily a notice must be given on an adjournment of an execution sale, the sufficiency thereof depending on statutory provisions.

In some jurisdictions as full a notice must be given on an adjournment as was required for the sale at the time and place originally appointed;³⁷ and under some statutes this notice may be given in writing on the original notice or by posting a no-

After offer in parcels

Where no bids were received when about one hundred forty-nine lots supposedly belonging to execution debtor were offered in separate tracts, fact that sheriff then sold property en masse without declaring adjournment as authorized by statute did not in, and of itself, constitute error.—Adams v. Short postponement

Action of sheriff in postponing execution sale for thirty minutes was not such an adjournment as to require another advertisement of sale. Bolani v. Wilson, 132 A. 881, 47 R.I. 317.

38. Idaho.—Ollis v. Kirkpatrick, 28 P. 435, 3 Idaho, Hasb., 247.

tice of postponement under the original.³⁸ In other jurisdictions a public proclamation made in the presence and hearing of the persons assembled at the time first fixed for the sale, and with notice thereof to the parties in interest, is sufficient;³⁹ but under some statutes this should be followed, in some cases, by a publication of the fact of the adjournment.⁴⁰

d. Effect of Adjournment or Irregularity

When a sale has been postponed, a sale thereafter on the day originally set is invalid; but mere irregularities will not ordinarily render the sale void.

Where under a statute prescribing certain days for making sales, a sale is regularly opened during such days, and thereafter postponed from day to day for want of bidders until a day beyond the time limited by statute, the sale is nevertheless valid, being in contemplation of law a sale on the day that the sale was first opened.⁴¹ Where a bid is made at a sheriff's sale and the sale is adjourned, the bid is withdrawn by implication.⁴² If postponement is made before the sale, a sale thereafter on the day originally set is invalid.⁴³ If the sale is postponed at the debtor's request, depreciation in the value of the property must be borne by him.⁴⁴

Effect of irregularity. An irregularity in the postponement will not vitiate the sale, unless the officer is guilty of fraud with respect to it, and even then the sale would not be void as to a bona fide purchaser without notice of the fraud.⁴⁵ Thus, failure to give notice of an adjournment in the manner prescribed is a mere irregularity which does not render the sale void,⁴⁶ and irregularities in the postponement, where under an arrangement with the debtor and for his benefit, are waived by him.⁴⁷

§ 210. Sale in Parcels

- a. In general
- b. Exceptions to rule
- c. Waiver of right
- d. Sale as void or voidable

a. In General

The general rule, adopted by statute in many jurisdictions, is that, where the property to be sold consists of distinct lots, tracts, or parcels, or is susceptible of division without injury, it should be offered for sale in parcels and not en masse.

The general rule, adopted by statute in many states, is that, where the property to be sold consists of distinct lots, tracts, or parcels,⁴⁸ or is susceptible of division without injury,⁴⁹ it should be offered for sale in parcels and not en masse, for the reason that a sale in that manner will generally realize the best price,⁵⁰ and will not result in taking from the debtor any more property than is necessary to satisfy the judgment,⁵¹ and will enable defendant to redeem any one or more of the parcels without being compelled to redeem all the land sold.⁵²

Excluding one tract
Where sale of several tracts brought more than required amount at execution sale, lot or lots bringing less than excess should be excluded.

Pa.—High v. High, 34 Berks Co.L.J. 23.

52. Ala.—Dean v. Lusk, 3 So.2d 310, 241 Ala. 519.

It has been held, however, that the statutory provision for a division of the property is merely directory,⁵³ and that the propriety of a sale en masse is a matter within the discretion of the officer, having in view the object to make the property bring the best possible price,⁵⁴ as is also the question as to the divisibility of the property and the size and value of the parcels offered,⁵⁵ and the officer's determination of this question is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive.⁵⁶

In any event the requirement of a sale in parcels does not authorize the sheriff to divide entire parcels of real or personal property in such a mode as to become oppressive or injurious to the parties,⁵⁷ nor bind him, unless required by defendant, to divide a single tract into parcels;⁵⁸ and if the property is not capable of subdivision, the sale of the entire property for the payment of a comparatively small judgment may be justified;⁵⁹ but where a part of the property, although not subdivided, may be conveniently sold, and the value of the whole is greatly in excess of the debt, such part should be so sold,⁶⁰ and in such a case the land should be offered in the smallest parcels compatible with a proper division of the land.⁶¹ Although the officer should notify defendant to divide the land into lots before the sale, it is not necessary that such notice be given at the time of seizure.⁶²

What constitutes separate tract, lot, or parcel. It has been held that it is the title of the debtor himself, as fixed by his deed, which determines whether the property shall be considered as one lot or several for the purpose of an execution sale;⁶³ but it cannot be said that because a deed describes the property conveyed as certain numbered lots that such lots do or do not constitute separate parcels.⁶⁴ An owner may convert two or more lots into one known parcel by his use of the land,⁶⁵ and a parcel may be single although divided by a street.⁶⁶

Division by defendant. In some jurisdictions, in the absence of fraud or collusion, the owner of the property levied on has the right to direct whether it shall be sold in separate parcels or in bulk,⁶⁷ and the officer is required to sell in accordance with such directions.⁶⁸ A written direction to sell real estate instead of personal property confers no authority to sell the land as one tract.⁶⁹

Demand for division. Under some statutes a demand on the officer for a division is not necessary,⁷⁰ although under other statutes a request to sell in parcels seems to be required.⁷¹

Presumption. In the absence of proof to the contrary it will be presumed that the sale was made in the proper manner.⁷²

b. Exceptions to Rule

The general rule as to sale en masse is subject to exceptions, such as where the property would sell for a less sum if offered in parcels, or where no bids have been received thereon when offered in parcels, etc.

Under some circumstances a sale en masse may be necessary, proper, or more expedient in order to protect the interests of all the parties.⁷³ Thus, where the property is not susceptible of division

without injury, or it appears that it would sell for a less sum if offered in parcels, a sale en masse is proper;⁷⁴ and under some statutes, where there is nothing to indicate that the land consists of more than one parcel, a sale in parcels is not required.⁷⁵

Where no bids on separate parcels. Although there is authority to the contrary,⁷⁶ as a general rule where the property has been first offered for sale in separate parcels and no bids have been received thereon, the officer may proceed to sell en masse,⁷⁷ but this does not authorize him to sacrifice the property in order to make a sale.⁷⁸ Under some statutes, the property, after being offered in separate parcels, should be offered successively in lots of two, three, etc., before selling en masse.⁷⁹

Offering by both methods. It has been held that the officer may offer the property for sale by both methods, reserving the bids, and if a larger amount is bid for the property en masse than the aggregate of the bids on the separate parcels, he may sell it en masse.⁸⁰

Mortgaged property. Where the property to be sold is subject to a mortgage, the proper course is to sell en masse,⁸¹ unless the mortgagor has conveyed his equity in the different parcels to different grantees.⁸²

Several or undivided interests. Statutes or rules requiring sales in parcels have been held not applicable to the sale of undivided interests,⁸³ but there is authority to the contrary.⁸⁴ Where the writ is against two persons who are each entitled to an undivided interest, it has been held that the interest of both may be sold together on one bid,⁸⁵ but on the other hand it has been held that the interest of each should be sold separately.⁸⁶ On a joint execution against a husband and wife, their interests as tenants by entireties may be sold separately.⁸⁷

Of course, the several interests of joint debtors in separate but contiguous lands cannot be sold as one for one price.⁸⁸

c. Waiver of Right

Compliance with the rule requiring sale in parcels may be waived by the execution defendant.

As the rule requiring a sale in parcels is intended for the benefit of execution defendant, compliance with it may be waived by him,⁸⁹ and such waiver may be implied from his acquiescence in the sale,⁹⁰ or from his delay in objecting thereto.⁹¹

d. Sale as Void or Voidable

By the weight of authority, a sale en masse of property which should have been sold in parcels is not void, but voidable only.

The general rule is that a sale, on execution en masse, of property which should have been sold in separate parcels is not void, but voidable only,⁹² and

It is generally required that notice be given of an execution sale and, under some statutes, notice must be served on the debtor.

In order that general publicity may be given to the sale, and the property disposed of to the best advantage of all who may be interested in the proceeds,⁹⁴ it is generally required by statute that a notice of the sale shall be given.⁹⁵ Unless required by statute, personal notice of the sale to the execution debtor is not necessary,⁹⁶ but the notices to be given, under some statutes, are two-fold, one for the public and the other for defendant,⁹⁷ and notice in writing must be served on the execution debtor if he resides in the state, county, or district,⁹⁸ or if he resides in a different county from that in which the land is situated.⁹⁹ The officer need not inform

Posting notice in mail

(1) It is conclusively presumed that properly addressed statutory notice of sheriff's sale, when mailed, will be received by addressee.—Dodson v. Langford, Tex.Civ.App., 26 S.W.2d 924.

(2) If notice of sheriff's sale had been deposited in mail with correct address of execution defendant, it would have been sufficient, even though it was not actually received by the execution defendant.—Crow v. Thompson, Tex.Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 1064, error dismissed, judgment correct—23 C.J. p 636 note 69 [g].

(3) However, the mailing of statutory notice of sheriff's sale with wrong address does not raise presumption that such notice will be received by addressee.—Dodson v. Langford, supra.

(4) If a sheriff is not informed as to the correct address of an execution defendant, he has the duty to use at least ordinary diligence to ascertain it in order to give notice of sheriff's sale; and where sheriff made no effort to ascertain the correct post office address of execution defendant, and he sent notice to wrong address, the sale will be deemed irregular.—Crow v. Thompson, supra.

Purchaser of trust deed

A purchaser of trust deed covering property, which assignee of judg-

plaintiff or his attorney of the time and place of sale.¹

Notice to other persons. The necessity of giving notice to persons other than the debtor is dependent on statutory provisions.²

Several executions. Where notice of sale under one execution is given, a sale cannot be made under such notice on an execution subsequently received;³ but where proper notice is given under one of several executions, in which the parties are the same, a sale thereunder is valid, although notice is not given under the other executions.⁴

b. How Given

The method of giving notice of an execution sale depends on the provisions of the statutes in the different jurisdictions, posting in a public place and advertising in a newspaper being the usual methods prescribed.

It is usually provided that sales shall be advertised by posting notices at one or more public places in the county where the property to be sold is situated, one of which places usually being the courthouse door of the county.⁵ Some statutes require the posting of notices only where there is no newspaper printed in the county,⁶ and where notice of publication is made in a newspaper outside the county where the property is situated.⁷ A "public place," as the term is used in the statutes, has been held to mean such a place that an advertisement posted in it would be likely to attract general attention so that its contents might reasonably be expected to become a matter of notoriety in the vicinity.⁸ If posting in several public places is required, it is not sufficient to post notices on different parts of the same building.⁹

Publication in newspaper. With reference to the sale of land under execution the statutes generally require that the sheriff shall not only post advertisements of the sale, but shall publish notice thereof for a stated period in some newspaper.¹⁰ Under some statutes, if no newspaper is published in the county, notice should be published in the nearest newspaper having the largest or a general circulation in the county;¹¹ and under other statutes the notice may be given either by posting or by publication in a newspaper in the county.¹² The general rule is that statutory provisions requiring publication must be strictly pursued, and even slight deviations therefrom will render the notice insufficient.¹³

ment sought to have sold at execution sale, was not entitled to notice of execution sale under statute requiring service of written notice on owner of property residing in county other than that in which realty is situated, since purchaser was not the owner, but applicable statute was one providing for notice by advertisement in a newspaper.—*City of St. Louis v. Relative nullity

The nullity of sheriff's sale because advertisement thereof in legal

Control of by officer. Where the statute makes it the duty of the officer to publish the notice of sale under execution, he alone has the power to determine and select the places and newspapers in which to publish the required notice.¹⁴ Under some statutes, however, the execution creditor or his attorney may designate the paper for publication.¹⁵

Proof of publication. The affidavit of the publisher, or his authorized agent, is generally sufficient proof of the publication,¹⁶ and the return of the officer need not establish such publication.¹⁷ The affidavit must be subscribed by the affiant.¹⁸

c. Contents

The notice should contain a description of the property, the time and place of the sale thereof, and any other matters required by statute.

Since the object of a general notice is to secure the attendance of purchasers at the sale and thus obtain a fair price for the property,¹⁹ such notice of sale should be designed to accomplish such object,²⁰ but a notice of sale is sufficient if it contains all that is required by the statute.²¹ It has been held that the notice should set out the terms on which the property is to be sold;²² but unless required by statute it need not state the amount due on the judgment,²³ nor specify whose interest in the property is to be sold, where there are several de-

Although such a statement has been held too vague and indefinite in some cases,²⁵ if the full title is to be sold, it has been held sufficient to state that the officer will sell all the right, title, and interest of defendant in certain real estate "taken as the property of defendants,"²⁶ and if the sale will not be subject to the right of redemption that fact should be stated.²⁷ If the interest of a mortgagor is to be sold, the notice should show that the property is mortgaged and that what is to be sold is only the right and interest of the mortgagor therein;²⁸ but the contrary has been held where the property is in the possession of the mortgagor, and the mortgage is recorded.²⁹ Where the notice undertakes to mention the day as of which the interest of the judgment debtor will be sold, it must do so correctly.³⁰

Surplusage in the notice has been held not to affect the sale.³¹

Description of property. A notice of sale should contain a description of the property to be sold.³² The description should be as full and complete as in the exercise of ordinary diligence it is possible for the officer to give in view of the character, condition, and location of the property;³³ but it is sufficient if the property is described with reasonable certainty,³⁴ so as to enable prospective purchasers, in the exercise of ordinary diligence, to identify it.³⁵ The notice is not invalid because it includes more than the sheriff was authorized to, or did in fact, sell,³⁶ or because it fails to state that less than the full amount of the property will be sold if it will satisfy the judgment.³⁷ Under some statutes, the advertisement of the sale of real property under execution, in addition to a description of the property, must specify the principal improvements thereon.³⁸

The time of the sale should be stated in the notice with such definiteness as will enable intending bidders to know when to be present.³⁹ It is not necessary, however, that the exact hour appointed for the sale should be stated if the time is fixed as between certain business hours of the day;⁴⁰ and where the hours between which property must be sold are fixed by statute it is not necessary to state in the notice the hour at which the sale is to take place.⁴¹

The place of sale should be set out in the notice, since "the designation of a place of sale is an essential requisite of the notice, without which it is in law no notice."⁴²

Setting out names of parties. By the better practice, and under some statutes, the names of the parties to the execution, especially that of defendant, should be set out in the notice of sale,⁴³ but, in the absence of a statute requiring it, it is not necessary that the notice set out the names of the parties.⁴⁴

Signature of officer. A notice of sale need not be signed by the officer in writing, a printed signature being sufficient.⁴⁵ Where a sale is made by a county sheriff acting as the deputy of a sheriff of the supreme court, the notice may be signed by him in his official capacity as county sheriff.⁴⁶

d. Time or Duration of Notice

Ordinarily notice of an execution sale should be given for the prescribed length of time before the sale.

The notice of sale is no part of the levy but the levy must be complete before such notice can be given.⁴⁷ The statutes providing for notice of an execution sale usually prescribe the length of time before sale for which such notice must be given and such provisions must be complied with.⁴⁸ Unless required by statute, it is not necessary that the last publication of the notice shall be the prescribed number of days before the day of sale;⁴⁹ and in computing the time the law does not recognize fractions of a day.⁵⁰

Where the statute requires the notice of sale to be published for a certain number of weeks, it has been held that this provision of the statute is not satisfied by a publication for less than seven days for each week, and that the full number of days contained in the number of weeks prescribed must elapse between the date of the first advertisement and the sale,⁵¹ although a contrary rule is established in some states which hold that publication once during each week for the proper number of weeks prior to the sale is sufficient without regard to the number of days elapsed.⁵² It has been held, however, under the latter construction, that a week

must be counted as a calendar week beginning on Sunday and ending with Saturday, and that the sale cannot be made on a day of the same week during which the last advertisement appears.⁵³

It has been held that a notice of sale, defective by reason of failure to publish it for the time designated by the statute, cannot be cured by a postponement of the sale to a day sufficiently remote to answer the statutory requirements.⁵⁴ The advertisement of a sale in anticipation of the dissolution of a restraining order, although a violation of the order, was held not to render the sale void, in the absence of fraud, collusion, or surprise.⁵⁵

Perishable property. Under some statutes, where the property levied on is of a perishable nature, the provision requiring a certain number of days' notice of sale does not apply, but the officer may obtain from the court authority for an immediate sale,⁵⁶ on his giving the required notice of his intention to make such application.⁵⁷

e. Effect of Failure to Give Proper Notice

While defects in the notice have been variously held to render the sale void or voidable, in most jurisdictions it is now provided that an improper notice does not affect the validity of a sale to an innocent purchaser since the party aggrieved has his remedy against the officer for any injuries sustained by reason of the neglect.

Although it has been held under some statutes that the failure to give the required notice renders the sale void,⁵⁸ as, for example, where there is a failure to publish the notice for the required length of time,⁵⁹ ordinarily the failure of the officer to give the notice or notices required by law will render the sale voidable only.⁶⁰ Thus a failure to specify the principal improvements on the property will render the sale voidable,⁶¹ and the sale is voidable where the description of the property in the notice is erroneous or insufficient,⁶² but defects in a description of the property which do not mislead will not vitiate the sale;⁶³ and it has been held that, where defendant has actual notice of the sale, failure to give notice to him as required by statute will not be considered.⁶⁴

It is expressly provided by statute in some states that the failure to give the required notice of sale shall not affect the validity of the sale,⁶⁵ and in most jurisdictions the neglect of the officer making a sale to give the notice required by law does not affect the validity of such sale to an innocent purchaser without notice of such omission, since the party aggrieved has his remedy against the officer for any injuries sustained by reason of the neglect.⁶⁶

Opening, vacating, or collateral attack on execution sale because of irregularities or misconduct affecting the sale is discussed infra § 232.

f. Objections and Waiver

Objections to the sufficiency of a notice can be made only by defendant in execution or by some person in privity with him, and such right may be waived.

Objections to the sufficiency of a notice can be made only by defendant in execution or by some person in privity with him,⁶⁷ and must be made in apt time.⁶⁸

Waiver. Since a statute requiring notice of a sale is intended for the benefit of the debtor, he may, either expressly or impliedly, waive its provisions;⁶⁹ but the waiver, to be upheld, must be made in good faith and not prejudicial to the rights of other creditors of defendant in execution.⁷⁰

g. Presumptions

Unless the contrary appears, it will ordinarily be presumed that an officer making an execution sale gave the prescribed notices.

Unless the contrary appears, it will, as a general rule, be presumed that an officer making a sale under execution gave all the requisite statutory notices⁷¹ in a proper manner;⁷² and where a publication is shown it will be presumed that the newspaper was such a one as was required by the statute.⁷³ In some jurisdictions, however, where objection is made to the confirmation of a sale for the want of legal notice, the rule is laid down that the officer must prove that the proper notice was given;⁷⁴ and also that the burden of proof is on the party setting up title to land based on an execution sale, to show that proper notice of such sale was given.⁷⁵

§ 212. Persons Who May Purchase

- a. In general
- b. Officer making sale
- c. Execution creditor or his representatives

d. Execution debtor or person in fiduciary relation

a. In General

Generally any person may purchase at an execution sale provided he is competent to contract and does not occupy such a relationship to the execution defendant as would prevent him from making his interests antagonistic to defendant's interests.

As a general rule any person may become a purchaser at an execution sale, provided he is competent to contract and does not occupy such a relationship to execution defendant as would prevent him from making his interests antagonistic to defendant's interests,⁷⁶ but a person cannot become a purchaser where, by reason of his duties in connection with the sale or his relationship to defendant, his individual interest as purchaser would be inconsistent with his duties.⁷⁷ A tenant in common,⁷⁸ a tenant by the entirety,⁷⁹ or a partner⁸⁰ may purchase the interest of his cotenant or copartner at an execution sale.

Appraiser. Under some statutes an appraiser is prohibited from purchasing the property appraised by him;⁸¹ but it has been held that in the absence of fraud a sale to such appraiser is not void, but merely voidable.⁸²

Fraudulent grantee. A fraudulent grantee of property may become the purchaser thereof at a subsequent sale under execution having a paramount lien, and if the purchase is bona fide he acquires a valid title, since the fraud of the first conveyance does not taint or vitiate a subsequent purchase in good faith.⁸³

A county,⁸⁴ city,⁸⁵ or a school district⁸⁶ may sometimes purchase property at an execution sale under a judgment in its favor.

b. Officer Making Sale

Ordinarily the officer making an execution sale cannot, either directly or indirectly, become the purchaser.

The rule of law that an agent cannot represent two principals whose interests are conflicting applies with peculiar force to execution sales, and the officer making the sale cannot, either directly or indirectly, become the purchaser,⁸⁷ even though a third person is jointly interested in the purchase;⁸⁸ at least he cannot do so without the consent of the creditor and the debtor;⁸⁹ nor can he bid for the property, either for himself or as the agent of another, as shown infra § 213. However, this rule does not prevent the officer from thereafter purchasing, as an individual, from the purchaser at the execution sale, where such purchase is not in pursuance of fraud, collusion, or prearrangement.⁹⁰

A deputy who makes or assists in selling is under the same disability as the sheriff as to becoming a purchaser,⁹¹ although it has been held that where the sale is made by the sheriff his deputy who is not concerned in the sale may become the purchaser.⁹² An ex-sheriff may buy land sold subsequently under a levy made when he was in office.⁹³

Generally a sale to the officer conducting the sale⁹⁴ or to his agent⁹⁵ is void; but it has been held that a sale by a sheriff to his own agent is not necessarily void at law but is voidable for fraud in fact;⁹⁶ and that, in the absence of statute to the contrary, a sale by the officer to a near relative⁹⁷ or to a corporation in which he is a stockholder⁹⁸ is not necessarily invalid.

c. Execution Creditor or His Representatives

The execution creditor or his representatives may purchase at the sale but it will be affected by slighter irregularities than if a stranger was the purchaser.

The execution creditor may, if he acts in good faith, become the purchaser,⁹⁹ especially where he has assigned his claim to another;¹ and such purchase may also be made by the creditor's attorney,² or by his assignee.³ However, the courts are not in accord as to whether or not the creditor or his attorney is a bona fide purchaser without notice, as shown infra § 295, but he is held to greater strictness, and a sale to him will be affected by slighter irregularities than if a stranger was the purchaser.⁴ Thus the party who has absolute control of the sale for his own benefit cannot be a purchaser unless there is a fair competition of bidders or a lawful opportunity given for such competition.⁵

A county judge, although a financial agent of the county, may purchase at a sale under a judgment in favor of the county, subject to an option in the county to claim the benefit of the purchase.⁶

d. Execution Debtor or Person in Fiduciary Relation

An execution debtor may become the purchaser at an execution sale, but a person standing in a fiduciary relation to him will not be permitted to derive an undue advantage at his expense.

Defendant in execution may become the purchaser;⁷ and one of two codefendants may purchase the property of the other defendant, when sold to satisfy a joint execution against both.⁸ A purchase by one acting for the debtor is not necessarily invalid;⁹ and a purchaser may lawfully buy with the intent of afterward giving the whole of it, or any part thereof, to the insolvent debtor or his family.¹⁰ It has been held, however, that a purchase at an execution sale, for the use of, or on behalf of, defendant in execution, is fraudulent, as creating a false impression on the other bidders,¹¹ or where the intention is to hold it for the benefit of the debtor and screen it from his creditors.¹²

Purchase of fiduciary for self. The doctrine that a person standing in a fiduciary relation to another will not be permitted to derive an undue advantage at the expense of the cestui que trust has been applied to execution sales,¹³ but as against other creditors the attorney for the debtor may purchase,¹⁴ and an attorney may always purchase where there is no fiduciary relation to the execution debtor.¹⁵

Debtor's wife. Unless a wife is incompetent to take title directly from her husband,¹⁶ the mere existence of the marital relation does not prevent or disqualify the wife from buying the property of the husband at a sale under an execution, if she does so with her own funds and without collusion with him to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors.¹⁷

§ 213. Bids

a. In general

b. Chilling and puffing the bidding

a. In General

A bid may be made in person or through an agent, or it may be made in writing or even by telephone, provided it is properly cried out; but the officer making the sale cannot bid for himself or as agent for another. A bid must be unconditional, and the amount for which the property is sold, must be within the statutory limits therefor. The sale usually should be made to the highest qualified bidder.

A bid may be made by the bidder in person or through an agent,¹⁸ or it may be made in writing,¹⁹ but the officer must regularly cry a written bid at the sale,²⁰ and a bid reduced to writing before the sale is concluded supersedes prior bids by the same person.²¹ It has been held proper to receive a bid by telephone where the officer makes a public outcry of the bid before striking off the property to such a bidder.²²

The officer making the sale cannot bid for the property, either for himself or as agent for another;²³ he cannot bid for the creditor under authority to bid off the property for him if it sells for less than the debt.²⁴ This, however, does not preclude his crying a bid of a third person who is absent and has telephoned or written to him a bid for a specific sum, as under such facts the bid is made by the third person and not by the officer;²⁵ although it has been held that written bids must be delivered to the officer at the sale, since the receipt of such bids by the officer at other times and places would constitute him the agent of such bidders and invalidate the sale.²⁶

Conditional bids at execution sales are contrary to the policy of the law and should be disregarded by the officer conducting the sale,²⁷ such as a bid coupled with an unauthorized condition as to the

"Upon confirmation of sale," not condition

Bid accepted on execution sale is an "unconditional bid," notwithstanding manner of payment.²⁸ If he accepts such a bid it is invalid, and the execution creditor, who has redeemed the premises from a foreclosure sale, is entitled, under a statutory provision that the amount of the redemption money so paid shall be regarded as a bid, to a sheriff's deed as having made the only valid bid.²⁹

Sale to highest bidder. The sale should be made to the highest qualified bidder,³⁰ provided the debt is not paid or the judgment discharged before.³¹ Except where the highest bid is not a proper one,³² if the officer refuses to call the highest bid and strikes off the property to a lower bidder, equity will order the sale resumed at the point of the uncalled bid and have the property struck off to such bidder in case no higher bid is thereafter made;³³ or the person whose higher bid was wrongfully rejected by the officer may recover the property from the lower bidder to whom it was sold.³⁴

On failure of the highest bidder to comply with his bid the sheriff, as a general rule, has no authority, without a resale, to convey the property to the next highest bidder,³⁵ although there are authorities to the effect that he may offer the property to the next highest bidder,³⁶ or make a return that the property was sold for so much, that the purchase money has not been paid, and that therefore the property remains unsold.³⁷

Necessity for more than one bidder. Unless fraud is involved,³⁸ it is the rule that a sale is not invalid merely because there was only one bidder;³⁹ and this is so, although a statute requires the sale to be to the "highest" bidder.⁴⁰ If there are no bidders, the officer making the sale should return the execution, "No sale for want of bidders," and not sell to the judgment creditor for a mere fraction of the worth of the property.⁴¹

Amount of bid. The amount of a bid which may be accepted, or in other words the amount for which the property may be sold, is generally regulated by the statute. Under the different statutes, the bid on which the sale is predicated must be sufficient to discharge prior privileges and mortgages which have a preference over the judgment creditor;⁴² or be a certain percentage of the appraised value of the property,⁴³ or of the debtor's equity or interest therein;⁴⁴ or, in case of the sale of a corporate franchise, must be for at least the amount of the debt.⁴⁵ If the bid, together with unpaid taxes, including penalty and costs, at the time of sale, amounts to the required amount or percentage, the sale is for the proper amount,⁴⁶ even though the purchaser, in the absence of fraud and collusion, later succeeds in procuring a reduction in the amount of the taxes.⁴⁷ Where a statute as to sale of encumbered property prevents the purchaser from acquiring anything more than a lien for his standing that return of order of sale shows that premises were sold "upon confirmation of sale and possession," where record discloses that sale was conducted substantially as prescribed by notice and in accordance with decree.—Holferty v. Wortman, 283 N.W. 855, 135 Neb. 732.

purchase price and interest, a bid cannot be received in excess of the debt, interest, and costs.⁴⁸ On a resale after the default of the purchaser at the first sale, no bid shall be received, under some statutes, except for a greater amount than the purchase price at the first sale,⁴⁹ but a default, within such a statute, is not constituted by the mere fact that plaintiff in execution, to whom the property was sold, refuses to receipt for the amount of his bid, or to credit his judgment.⁵⁰

b. Chilling and Puffing the Bidding

Puffing or chilling the bidding is generally regarded as fraudulent and as being ground for setting aside the sale, as where an agreement or arrangement on the part of the bidders, or an act or representation by the purchaser, diminishes competition and stifles or chills the bidding.

Chilling or puffing of the bidding at a sheriff's sale is regarded as fraudulent, and it is well settled that on a timely application made by a motion to the court out of which the execution issued, or by a suit in equity, the sale will be set aside where such fraudulent practices have been resorted to.⁵¹

Agreement or combination. It is the policy of the courts to discountenance combinations or agreements on the part of bidders at execution sales, the object and effect of which are to stifle competition, and the courts will deny to any party to such agreement or combination any benefit from the sale and set it aside on proper motion,⁵² unless all parties concerned know of the arrangement and assent thereto.⁵³ This rule, however, does not apply to an association or combination of bidders formed for honest and proper purposes,⁵⁴ as in the case of a union of several persons formed on account of the magnitude of the sale, or where the quantity offered to a single bidder would exceed the amount which individuals might wish to purchase on their own account;⁵⁵ or where several execution creditors, for the purpose of preventing a sacrifice of the property of their debtor, enter into an agreement to bid off the property, and under this agreement it brings approximately its full value at the sale,⁵⁶ unless fraud was contemplated or committed.⁵⁷ It has been held that, even where the conduct of bidders was such as to deter other bidders desiring to purchase the property which was to be sold, the sale should not be set aside on such ground unless it is shown that there was at the sale a person or persons who would have, but for such conduct, become bidders for the property, and that by reason of this arrangement they were actually deterred from participating in the bidding.⁵⁸

Employment of agent to make purchase. Where property is purchased by one person for another, even though both persons are present at the sale, such sale is not void on the ground that there was a chilling of the bidding.⁵⁹

Representations or conduct. Since all execution sales should be open to free and full competition, the general rule is that, where the purchaser does any act or makes any false representation, the effect of which is to destroy such competition and stifle bids, by reason of which the property sells at an undervalue, the sale will be invalid;⁶⁰ and if the representation is untrue it is usually immaterial whether the person making the representation did or did not know of its falsity.⁶¹ If, however, a party has an interest in property about to be sold under execution, or a valid claim against it, or one believed to be valid, it is not improper for him to announce such interest or claim before the sale takes place, and such statement is not improper chilling of bidding and will not estop him from becoming a purchaser of the property nor invalidate the sale;⁶² and this also applies to a true representation of the purchaser that he intended to buy for the debtor.⁶³ No inference of impropriety can be drawn from the fact that the attorneys for the creditor informed one of the purchasers that a sale was to be had, and suggested that he bid,⁶⁴ or from representations made months before the judgment was rendered, without any apparent purpose of preventing competition at the sale.⁶⁵ Deterring bidders for the benefit of defendant, and with his consent, does not vitiate the sale as between him and the purchaser.⁶⁶ The debtor cannot complain that the sale was for an inadequate price where, at the time of the sale, he forbade it and impeached the validity of the judgment and execution, thus doing all in his power to prevent a sale at an adequate price.⁶⁷

§ 214. — Acceptance, Withdrawal, or Rejection

In accepting or rejecting a bid, the sheriff may consider the solvency or responsibility of the bidder, and the adequacy of the amount bid. An adjournment of the sale impliedly rejects bids made prior thereto. After acceptance a bid ordinarily cannot be withdrawn, unless made under a mistake of fact.

The sheriff has the right to judge of the solvency of bidders and the sufficiency of security offered by them, and may refuse to accept the bid of an insolvent or irresponsible person,⁶⁸ including the bid of a minor or one under disability,⁶⁹ or a bid beyond the amount that he believes the bidder able to make good;⁷⁰ and it has been held that he may, as a guaranty of the bidder's good faith, require a deposit to be made before accepting the bid.⁷¹ He should reject a bid of an insolvent agent who bids in excess of his authority.⁷²

Inadequate bid. The officer should not sell property levied on, for a grossly inadequate or a merely nominal price,⁷³ but should return the writ with a statement that the property was not sold for want of buyers,⁷⁴ or should postpone the sale, as stated supra § 209.

Where a sale is adjourned, bids made prior to such adjournment are impliedly rejected, and the bidder does not incur any liability on account of his bid,⁷⁵ or any right to demand a conveyance to him of the property.⁷⁶

Withdrawal of or release from bid. The bidder has a right to withdraw his bid without incurring any liability at any time before the property is actually struck off to him,⁷⁷ and the sheriff has no authority to prescribe conditions which deprive the bidder of this right;⁷⁸ and, in the absence of evidence that a bid was consummated by deed or possession, it will be presumed, after the lapse of a number of years, that the bid was renounced.⁷⁹ If the bid is withdrawn, the bidder cannot afterward insist on the sale to him under such bid,⁸⁰ nor can he thereafter object to the propriety of the mode of bidding.⁸¹ The acceptance of a higher bid releases prior bidders from liability;⁸² and an order of court staying a sale on execution authorizes the sheriff to relieve from their bids persons to whom portions of the property had been struck off before notice of the stay reached the officer in actual charge of the sale.⁸³ A purchaser is also released if his failure to give a bond, as required by statute, is acquiesced in and no proceeding is had to enforce his bid in a reasonable time.⁸⁴

After acceptance a bid is binding, in the absence of fraud, whether the judgment debtor has title or not.⁸⁵ The bidder cannot thereafter withdraw his bid without the consent of the parties,⁸⁶ except that where the bid is made under a mistake of fact and the bidder acts promptly, the sheriff may, in his discretion, allow the bid to be withdrawn and treat the sale as a nullity, without the consent of the judgment debtor.⁸⁷ An execution plaintiff should not be allowed to withdraw his bid merely because he has bid more than the property is worth,⁸⁸ but where such a bid is made by an agent, who, by mistake exceeds his instructions, he should, if he acts promptly and plaintiff pays the costs, be allowed to withdraw his bid.⁸⁹

A purchaser at an execution sale may assign his contract to another.

A purchaser at an execution sale may assign his contract to another, and the sheriff's deed to such assignee will be valid,⁹⁰ and such an assignment may be made by an informal writing.⁹¹ A conveyance to one who was not the purchaser at an execution sale is void, unless authorized by such an assignment.⁹²

§ 216. Payment of Bid

An execution sale is effected only where the amount of the bid has been paid in accordance with the terms of the sale. If the sale is for cash, payment generally should be made on the day of sale, or when the certificate of sale is delivered, unless the parties consent to a delay.

A sale under execution is not effected until the successful bidder complies with his bid,⁹³ and, as stated infra § 289, no title is acquired until the money is paid in accordance with the terms of the sale. Where the terms of the sale are cash, unless a delay in payment is allowed by the act or consent of the parties,⁹⁴ the general rule is that the money to satisfy the bid should be paid to the officer immediately on the day of sale,⁹⁵ or when the certificate of sale is delivered.⁹⁶ In some states, however, the officer may give a reasonable time to the purchaser for the payment, at least in the absence of objection by the parties to the execution,⁹⁷ but in such cases he must secure the rights of the parties by making a proper memorandum of the sale.⁹⁸ The conditions of the sale may fix a certain sum or per cent to be paid at the time of the sale, and the balance to be paid a certain number of days thereafter,⁹⁹ and this rule has also been applied by statute.¹ A failure to pay the balance of the bid until after the time fixed by the conditions of the sale precludes the rights of the purchaser, at least where it appears that both parties treated the sale as rescinded by consent.²

§ 217. — Cash or Credit

- a. In general
- b. Bond for purchase money

a. In General

Except where authority to sell on credit is given by statute, the sale generally should be for cash, unless the parties agree otherwise. If the judgment creditor, or a prior lien creditor, becomes the purchaser, payment may be effected by crediting the amount of his debt on the execution, unless there are other liens on the property of equal dignity, in which case the purchase money may be required to be paid, to be deposited in court for distribution.

Except in so far as authority to sell on credit is given by statute,³ which has been held constitutional,⁴ an officer, as a general rule, must sell for cash and has no legal right to sell on credit,⁵ and no power to execute a receipt for the money bid until he receives the same,⁶ unless there is consent or an agreement of the parties to the contrary⁷ or a direction by the execution creditor to receive something other than cash.⁸ Cash within the meaning of this rule generally means current legal tender or money,⁹ or that which substantially amounts to payment in cash,¹⁰ and not a check, draft, or other form of negotiable instrument,¹¹ unless the parties consent or agree to receive it as cash.¹² The purchaser cannot set off against his bid a claim against the execution creditor.¹³

Judgment creditor as purchaser. Where the judgment creditor becomes a purchaser at the execution sale, although the sale was advertised as for cash in hand,¹⁴ payment may be effected by crediting the amount of his debt on the execution,¹⁵ and the officer should, at the direction of such judgment creditor, credit the amount of his debt on the execution, if the costs of the sale are paid;¹⁶ but not where he refuses to make a payment at least sufficient to cover the costs,¹⁷ although the sale is not rendered incomplete by the fact that the officer failed to pay over the costs to the clerk of the court.¹⁸ It has been held that if the sheriff treats the sale as complete it will be presumed that such costs were paid.¹⁹ If the judgment creditor's bid exceeds the amount due, he must pay the excess, as explained infra § 219. Where there are other liens on the property of equal dignity with the lien of the judgment creditor, the officer may require him to pay over the purchase money in order that he may deposit the same in court to await a judicial decision as to the distribution thereof;²⁰ or, under some statutes, the seizing creditor, as purchaser, must retain in his hands a sufficient sum to discharge prior mortgages and liens recorded against the property.²¹

Purchase by lien creditor. Where the purchaser is a prior judgment creditor,²² or is a mortgagee whose mortgage has priority over the execution,²³ he may retain the amount of his debt. If the execution judgment is prior to the mortgage, the mortgagee purchaser may apply his mortgage on the amount of his bid in excess of the execution debt.²⁴ Under some statutes lien creditors may pay by giving a receipt;²⁵ but, although such statute does not apply to the real owner, who is forced to purchase the property, the sheriff may be required to accept his receipt for the balance of the purchase price over and above encumbrances, costs, and interest.²⁶

Under some statutes, the sale may be made on credit, on the giving of a bond for the purchase price; and on default in payment, it may be enforced by issuing execution on the bond, or, if it is void as a statutory bond, by an action on it as a common-law bond.

Under some statutes the sale may be made on credit, on the giving of a bond for the purchase price.²⁷ The sheriff is the proper judge of the sufficiency of the bond;²⁸ and if the bond has been taken and returned, and the return recorded, he cannot withdraw it and accept others in lieu thereof.²⁹ Such a bond cannot be quashed, at the instance of the obligors, without also quashing the sale;³⁰ but it may be canceled by agreement between the parties.³¹ The purchaser's liability to the execution creditor on the bond is not affected by losses, with respect to the property, which occur without any fault or participation on the part of the creditor,³² but it is otherwise where the creditor has directed the execution and sale.³³ If the purchaser, in order to retain the property, is forced to pay a mortgage existing on it at the time of the sale, he is entitled to credit for the amount so paid on that part of the bond payable to the execution debtor, who by accepting and receiving payment on the bond, has adopted the sale.³⁴ The purchaser, however, cannot avoid liability on the bond on the ground that he was the owner of the property at the time of sale,³⁵ or that the bond has been misplaced.³⁶ The sureties on such a bond are entitled to the protection of a lien on the property sold to secure the payment of the bond.³⁷

Number of bonds. If the sale on credit is for an amount in excess of the demand, a separate bond should be taken for such excess, payable to defendant;³⁸ and if in such a case the bond is taken for the whole amount payable to the judgment creditor, he or the judgment debtor, but not the obligors in the bond, may have the bond quashed.³⁹ Where there are several judgment creditors, as many bonds should be taken as may be necessary to deliver to each party his proper portion after deducting the costs;⁴⁰ and in such a case, if all the liens of the different creditors are of equal dignity, a sale of the property under execution on the bond cannot be had until all the bonds are due.⁴¹ However, a bond payable jointly to the several execution creditors, although irregular, is not void, and may be avoided only at the instance of the obligees.⁴²

Enforcement. On default in payment, it may be enforced by issuing execution on the bond,⁴³ unless it is not good as a statutory bond,⁴⁴ in which case it may be good as a common-law bond and be enforced by an action thereon;⁴⁵ but where it is quashed, as a statutory bond, an action cannot be maintained on it while the quashing judgment stands.⁴⁶ It has been held that the sheriff may sue in his official capacity on a sale bond executed in favor of his predecessor.⁴⁷ Unless authorized by statute,⁴⁸ the sheriff is not entitled to recover interest on a bond taken for the purchase money.⁴⁹ A declaration on such a bond should allege the sale and a breach of the conditions thereof.⁵⁰

§ 218. Failure to Comply with Bid

A purchaser who has failed to comply with his bid may, in some states, be proceeded against for the full amount of the bid; but the usual remedy, which in some states must be pursued, is to resell the property and proceed against the defaulting purchaser for any deficiency between the amount bid by him and the amount realized on the resale. Under some statutes, he may also be held liable for a penalty.

On the failure of the purchaser to comply with the terms of sale, the sheriff may, in some states, proceed against the purchaser for the full amount of his bid;⁵¹ but his usual remedy, which in some states it is his duty to pursue, is to resell the property and proceed against the defaulting purchaser for any deficiency between the amount bid by him and the amount realized on the resale;⁵² and if the officer has a right of election as to which course he will pursue, he must pursue the course he elects.⁵³ It has been held that where the officer has been in no default, such as by delivering the property without payment, it is his positive duty to resell, and not to sue for the purchase price;⁵⁴ and, under some statutes, it is the sheriff's duty to resell, where the execution plaintiff or his attorney does not proceed against the purchaser for the amount of his bid.⁵⁵ This right to resell exists where there has been a part payment of the bid and a default as to the balance,⁵⁶ but it has been held that there cannot be a resale under the execution, where a sufficient part of the purchase money has been paid to satisfy the execution, and the balance due is only as to the excess.⁵⁷

Resale after unconditional delivery of property. Where the sheriff makes an unconditional delivery of personal property sold, the sale thereby becomes complete and the sheriff thereafter cannot lawfully seize the property again and resell it for nonpayment of the purchase price, as such a delivery without payment, while it may render the sheriff liable, does not impair the title transferred to the purchaser.⁵⁸ If the sheriff thereafter receives the property and resells it at the purchaser's request, he does so as the agent of the purchaser and not in his official capacity; in such a case he may hold the first purchaser liable on the original sale, the only consequence of the second sale being that credit must be given to the first purchaser for the amount raised thereon.⁵⁹

Penalty. Under some statutes a defaulting purchaser, in addition to his liability for the price bid or the deficiency on a resale, is also liable to pay a certain amount by way of damages or as a penalty.⁶⁰ Such a statute, giving a certain per cent of the value of the property sold, refers to its value as encumbered, and hence if the property is so encumbered that the sale passes a right of no value, the statutory penalty does not apply;⁶¹ nor does it apply where nothing is really sold, as where the property has passed into the custody of a bankruptcy court, before the sheriff attempts to sell.⁶²

§ 219. — Liability for Price Bid

Where a bid is accepted, so as to form a contract, the bidder is liable to pay the bid, and on his default, an action or proceeding will lie against him for the amount due.

Where a bid at an execution sale is accepted, so as to form a binding contract, the bidder becomes liable to pay the bid, and on his default an action, or appropriate statutory proceeding, to recover the amount due will lie against him;⁶³ and this rule applies to sales on credit,⁶⁴ except where the statute requires that the sale be made for cash only.⁶⁵ This right to recover the amount of the bid exists, in some states, although the statute, or conditions of the sale, directs the sheriff to resell if the purchaser fails to comply with his bid,⁶⁶ and a return of the sale by the officer is not a condition precedent.⁶⁷ However, there is no liability where the bidder was of unsound mind so as to be incapable of making a contract.⁶⁸ The amount of the bid, not the value of the property, is the measure of recovery.⁶⁹ Where the judgment creditor is the purchaser, the officer can only hold him liable for the amount of his bid in excess of the amount due on his judgment.⁷⁰

§ 220. — Resale, and Liability for Loss Thereon

On a resale, the defaulting purchaser is liable, as on an implied contract, for any deficiency between the amount of his bid and the amount realized on the second sale, provided there are no alterations in the terms of the first sale, the property and title are the same, the second sale is under the same execution, and within the proper time therefor, and notice of the resale is properly given.

Where the sheriff rightfully resells property which the purchaser at the first sale has refused or neglected to pay for, there is an implied contract by the first purchaser to pay the difference which is thus ascertained between his bid and the price realized at the subsequent sale.⁷¹ The defaulting purchaser is liable, although the property is sold for a larger sum at a second sale where the second purchaser also makes default, and the amount bid at the third sale is less than at the first sale.⁷² However, it has been held that the deficiency cannot be recovered by the party injured, where the sheriff in his return on the execution, after the resale, makes no mention of the first or uncompleted sale.⁷³

Terms of resale. Any alteration in the terms of the first sale on the resale of the property will release the first purchaser from all liabilities for the loss occasioned by the second sale,⁷⁴ as where the terms and conditions of the resale, with respect to payment, are materially different from those of the first sale, so as probably to result in lowering the price.⁷⁵

Identity of property and title. In order to hold a defaulting purchaser liable for the difference between the price at which he bid off the property and the price at which it is subsequently sold, the same property must be resold, and resold as the property of the identical parties as whose property it had been bid off by him.⁷⁶ Likewise, the defaulting purchaser cannot be held liable for a deficiency on resale, if it appears that under the first sale he would have acquired a more valuable title than that which passed to the purchaser at the resale.⁷⁷

Second sale under different execution. Where the second sale of the property is under a different execution from that under which the first sale was had, and in favor of a different plaintiff, this second sale is not a resale within the meaning of the general rule, but is an original sale;⁷⁸ and although the purchaser who has made default at the first sale purchases at the second, the sheriff cannot maintain an action against him to recover a deficiency.⁷⁹ Where the sheriff resells under a new process, after a return of the original execution stating the failure of the purchaser to pay, he cannot hold the first purchaser liable for the difference between his bid and a lesser sum realized at the resale.⁸⁰

Time for and notice of resale. There is authority to the effect that the officer need not immediately reexpose the property for sale,⁸¹ especially where it has already been twice sold on the same day;⁸² but may postpone the sale, giving notice thereof, and then make a new sale at a subsequent time,⁸³

particularly where, under the circumstances, there is not time in which to procure an earlier sale.⁸⁴ However, unless otherwise provided by statute,⁸⁵ the officer, as a general rule, may, and under some statutes should, immediately reoffer the property for sale where the purchaser repudiates his purchase,⁸⁶ unless plaintiff consents to a delay;⁸⁷ and it has been held that he may resell at once even though he has announced in his conditions of sale that he will adjourn the sale in case the property should be bid off by any person who should neglect or refuse to comply with the conditions.⁸⁸ The resale may be on the same day without advertising it,⁸⁹ but the officer cannot resell on the same day after the sale is closed and the bidders have departed.⁹⁰ Under some statutes, if the purchaser fails to give a purchase-money bond, when the property is knocked off to him, the officer may at once disregard the bid and resell to another,⁹¹ or he may, in his discretion, readvertise the property and sell it on another day, entirely disregarding the purchaser who refused to give bond.⁹² Where by statute the sale must be made between certain hours, and the purchaser has by consent until the last hour to pay the amount of his bid, it is irregular to make a resale a few moments before such hour.⁹³

The statutory notice of sale need not be given a second time,⁹⁴ at least unless the sale is several days afterward and there is no adjournment of the sale.⁹⁵ Where the property sold is real estate, notice to the defaulting purchaser that a resale will be had and that he will be held liable for any loss is a prerequisite to charging him with liability for the deficiency,⁹⁶ and such notice must contain an offer by the sheriff to convey the property to the first purchaser before the second sale;⁹⁷ but such notice has been held not to apply where the property is personal estate.⁹⁸ However, the sheriff is not bound to give to the original purchaser notice of the time and place of the second sale; it is sufficient to notify him that unless he pays his bid the property will be resold;⁹⁹ and it has been held that if the property is regularly readvertised, further notice to the defaulting purchaser is not necessary.¹

Measure of damages. In an action against the original purchaser to recover a deficiency in price after a resale, the measure of damages, in the absence of statutory regulations, is the difference between the amount of the bid at the first sale and the sum realized at the second sale, together with the costs and expenses attending the resale,² exclusive of attorney's fees.³ Under some statutes, however, if it appears that the judgment debtor had no interest in the property, the recovery is limited to the difference between the amount received on the resale and the amount due the judgment creditor, plus costs.⁴ Where the sale is of personal property which on the resale brings a lower price, any absolutely necessary and proper expense attendant on the keeping, storage, and preservation of the property pending the readvertisement and resale may be treated as increasing the deficiency for which the original purchaser is liable;⁵ and where the proceeds of the resale exceed the bid at the first sale, but the surplus does not cover the costs of preserving the goods, the excess of costs can be recov-

§ 221. — Defenses by Purchasers

A purchaser at an execution sale ordinarily cannot set up, as against his liability for the purchase money or for a deficiency on a resale, any defense with respect to the title, quantity, value, or condition of the property purchased; or as to defects or irregularities in the sale or proceedings prior thereto. Fraud or mistake affecting his purchase generally is available as a defense.

The rule of caveat emptor applies to purchasers at execution sales,⁷ and, as stated infra § 287, he acquires only such interest or title as the judgment debtor possessed. In accordance with this rule, the purchaser ordinarily cannot set up, as a defense to his liability for the purchase money or for a deficiency on a resale, defects in the debtor's title,⁸ the existence of encumbrances,⁹ a deficiency in quantity of the land,¹⁰ or, in the absence of artifice or fraud, that the price bid is more than the property is worth.¹¹ Although there is authority to the contrary,¹² he ordinarily cannot set up as a defense the absence of any title in the debtor,¹³ even though the title is in himself,¹⁴ and this rule is particularly applicable where he has delayed asking for a confirmation of the sale until after tax liens against the property have ripened into tax deeds.¹⁵ Where the property sold is personalty, the rule of caveat emptor precludes any defense based on the ground that the chattel was defective or unsound¹⁶ or that the officer had delivered possession of the goods.¹⁷ It

No conveyable title

Where the holder of a security deed merely transfers the note secured, the transferee of the note has no title which he could reconvey for the purpose of levy, and, in the absence of a title to defendant in fieri facias prior to the levy and sale at which defendant bid for the land, the sale is void, and defendant cannot be compelled to comply with his bid.—Corley v. is not a defense that after refusal of the purchaser to perfect the sale he was not immediately, or shortly thereafter, notified that he would be held to his bid;¹⁸ that the sheriff had not tendered a certificate of sale to him, where the bidder stated that he would not have paid the bid in any event;¹⁹ that the sale was illegal because the entire price was not required to be paid in cash;²⁰ that the execution debtor who is plaintiff does not show that he is able or willing to procure a sheriff's deed to the property,²¹ or that his bid was induced by the agreement of another to finance the purchase, and that his failure to complete the transaction was due to such other's refusal to advance money therefor;²² nor, in the case of a sale of property of a decedent, can the purchaser be excused from payment on the ground of subrogation to the rights of the widow, who is his debtor.²³

On the other hand, it is a defense to an action for the balance of the bid that the property has been sold and conveyed to another person,²⁴ or that the officer has failed or refuses to make title.²⁵ In order to hold the purchaser liable for his bid, such title as the execution defendant actually had must have passed by the sale; and if the sale from any cause is inoperative to transfer the debtor's interest, such as it may be, the purchaser cannot be held liable for the amount of his bid.²⁶ It has been held that if the purchaser is disturbed in his possession or is justified in believing that he will be, he may retain the purchase money until he is relieved of his apprehension or protected by adequate security,²⁷ unless he was informed of the defect in title or the danger of eviction before the sale.²⁸ Payment of the bid to the officer, and a confirmation of

Fraud. Notwithstanding the rule of caveat emptor, the purchaser will be protected from paying the purchase price where he was induced to purchase through the misrepresentations of the judgment creditor or debtor, even though he might have ascertained their falsity by the examination of the public records.³⁰ Fraud or misrepresentation by the execution debtor is a defense to an action to enforce the purchaser's bid where the action is brought by the execution debtor,³¹ and the purchaser has not received title.³² Where, however, the action is brought by the sheriff, and title to the property has passed by delivery, and the execution debtor is entitled to no part of the purchase money, the bid being less than the amount of the debt, the purchaser cannot set up the execution debtor's fraud in defense, but must bring a separate action against him, the principal reason being that in such a case the execution debtor is no party to the contract of sale.³³ Any statement of the sheriff as to the title the purchaser would receive furnishes no legal excuse for the nonpayment of the bid.³⁴

Mistake. Where a plain mistake, not as to the title, but as to the property levied on and sold, has been made by the sheriff, execution defendant, and the purchaser, and the mistake materially affects the value of the property actually sold, and the purchaser applies to have the sale set aside before the money has been actually paid, he is entitled in equity to such relief.³⁵ However, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the officer, the execution creditor, or the debtor, a misapprehension of the facts on the part of the purchaser will not relieve him from liability on his bid.³⁶ The mistaken inclusion of interest on a sale bond at a higher than the legal rate of interest is not a defense.³⁷ A unilateral mistake of law has been held to be no defense,³⁸ although there is authority to the contrary.³⁹

Bidder acting as agent. Where the successful bidder is in fact purchasing for a third person, but does not disclose this fact to the sheriff until after the contract of sale is complete by the acceptance of the bid and its entry into the sheriff's sales book, the fact that the bidder afterward informs the sheriff that the purchase was for a third person does not relieve him from liability under his bid.⁴⁰ Where, however, the sheriff knows that the bidder is acting as agent for a third person, and in making the sale treats with him as acting in this representative capacity, the sheriff's right of action is not against the bidder, but against his principal.⁴¹

Defects prior to sale. In an action to recover the price bid or to recover the difference between the bid and the amount realized at a resale of the property, defects or irregularities in the proceedings, prior to the sale, such as in the writ,⁴² or levy,⁴³ the notice of sale,⁴⁴ or in the judgment, where the judgment is not void,⁴⁵ are no defense.

§ 222. — Proceedings to Enforce Bid

Recovery of the amount of the bid, or for a deficiency on a resale, may be had by an action, or, under some statutes, by a proceeding by motion. Under some statutes, the execution creditor or his attorney is the proper party so to proceed, but ordinarily the action may be brought by the officer conducting the sale or in his name. Usual rules apply as to the pleading and evidence.

An action lies against a defaulting purchaser to recover the amount bid,⁴⁶ or the difference on a resale;⁴⁷ but in such an action by the officer for the price of goods sold he cannot insist that he had no authority to stipulate, as a condition of sale, that he would actually deliver the goods sold.⁴⁸

However, under some statutes a proceeding by motion on notice for judgment for the purchase money,⁴⁹ or for the difference on a resale,⁵⁰ may be had; but it has been held that such remedy may be had only against the actual purchaser at the sale.⁵¹ This summary remedy is not available to the execution creditor who has received a check given by the purchaser, if he does not offer to rescind the contract or tender back the check when payment thereof is refused.⁵²

Conditions precedent. The making of a return by the sheriff is not a prerequisite to an action by him to recover the amount of the bid,⁵³ especially where he is not bound to make the return until the bid has been paid.⁵⁴ Under some statutes, on the mere failure of the purchaser of land to pay the purchase money the sheriff may not hold him in default and institute proceedings to enforce the bid without first demanding payment and tendering a deed; and this applies whether the remedy sought is directly against the purchaser in the first instance or is by way of resale and action to recover the deficiency;⁵⁵ but, on the other hand, by other authorities, a tender of a deed is not necessary to hold the purchaser to his bid.⁵⁶ It has been held that it is essential to a recovery on a motion for the difference on a resale that the purchaser refuse to comply with his bid,⁵⁷ and that a loss results from the resale.⁵⁸

Who may sue; parties. Under some statutes the only party who may proceed against a bidder who fails to comply with his bid is the execution credi-

tor or his attorney.⁵⁹ Ordinarily, however, whether the action against the purchaser at an execution sale is for the whole purchase price, or only for the deficiency resulting from a resale, it may be brought by the officer conducting the sale or in his name;⁶⁰ or he may bring such action in the name of another as usee.⁶¹ It has been held that the sheriff is the only person who can maintain such an action,⁶² and that the execution creditor cannot maintain such action against the purchaser, since there is no privity between them.⁶³ On the other hand, it has been held that the right of action for the deficiency on a resale belongs to either party to the execution who has been injured by the bidder's default,⁶⁴ and not to the officer, unless he has rendered himself liable or suffered some damage by reason thereof,⁶⁵ or unless he proclaimed at the resale that he was selling at the risk of the first purchaser;⁶⁶ and that, even though the sheriff can maintain the action against the bidder, it does not exclude a right of action in those to whose benefit the recovery of the sheriff inures.⁶⁷ However, if the amount bid is less than the amount of the debt, so that the execution debtor is entitled to no part of the price, the execution debtor clearly is not entitled to bring an action to enforce the bid, and the action is properly brought by the sheriff.⁶⁸ Where a part payment of the bid has been deposited in court, to be distributed, the sheriff need not bring an action to recover a deficiency on a resale, but the party injured by the purchaser's default and for whose use the sheriff would recover is entitled to his damages in the distribution of the fund;⁶⁹ but, if the sheriff recovers a judgment for the deficiency, defendant will not be allowed to pay the amount into court, but the sheriff should collect the judgment and file his account of the proceeds.⁷⁰ Where the judgment debtor has been decreed to have no interest in property sold under execution, the actual owner cannot compel the purchaser at the execution sale to complete the purchase for his benefit.⁷¹

Where plaintiff's attorney, in his own name, bids off property at a sheriff's sale on execution and takes a certificate from the sheriff in his own name, the presumption is that the purchase was on his own account, and he may be made defendant in an action by the sheriff to recover the amount of the bid.⁷²

Against execution creditor. The officer can recover from the execution creditor as purchaser only to the extent that money arising from the sale is applicable to the payment of his costs.⁷³

Pleading. The declaration or complaint should aver the judgment and proceedings on which the execution issued;⁷⁴ but the judgment and execution need not be set forth at length.⁷⁵ The officer's return to the execution should also be stated in the declaration,⁷⁶ although it has been held that it is not necessary to do this, where the declaration sets forth the facts necessary to constitute the cause of action, with substantial certainty.⁷⁷ Defendant should be refused permission to amend his answer to deny that the bid was his bid and that the purchase was made without his authority, where the evidence discloses that he refused a deed when he found it impossible to finance the purchase.⁷⁸ In a proceeding by motion, it is sufficient for the motion to allege that the property was first sold for a specified sum, and that the property on a resale brought a smaller amount, stating it, without averring in specific terms that "loss was occasioned thereby," in the language of the statute.⁷⁹

Evidence. In some states in an action by a sheriff to recover the purchase price of property sold, the return of the officer is sufficient prima facie evidence to support the action,⁸⁰ and all that is necessary, in order to charge the purchaser, is to prove the sale and produce the writ under which it was made,⁸¹ and the execution must be introduced in evidence, or its absence satisfactorily accounted for.⁸² The sheriff's return is admissible in an action to recover the difference on a resale,⁸³ as is also the fieri facias, although an entry of sale does not appear thereon.⁸⁴ A deed exhibited by the sheriff at the time of the sale, but not then examined by the purchaser, is not evidence in behalf of the latter.⁸⁵ Matters of affirmative defense set up by the purchaser must be proved by him.⁸⁶

§ 223. Entry and Record of Sale

Statutory provisions sometimes prescribe that the officer conducting the sale shall make an entry or record thereof, or file the certificate of sale or a duplicate thereof. The filing and recording give constructive notice of the sale, and the record and the original are evidence of the facts therein contained. The statutes are generally construed to be merely directory, so that a failure to comply therewith will not ordinarily affect the purchaser's title unless innocent third persons are injured thereby.

Under statutory provisions in force in various jurisdictions the officer conducting the sale is required to make an entry or record thereof, or to file the certificate of sale or a duplicate copy thereof in the office of the clerk or registrar of deeds within a reasonable time thereafter, in order that the parties whose interests are affected may have proper notice.⁸⁷ Although in some states a sale not recorded is void except as between the parties thereto,⁸⁸ it is generally held that these statutes are merely directory, in so far as the rights of the purchaser are concerned,⁸⁹ and hence that a failure to file or record,⁹⁰ or index,⁹¹ does not ordinarily affect the title of the purchaser, unless the execution debtor or innocent third persons are injured thereby.⁹²

The filing, or filing and recording, as the statute may require, import constructive notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers;⁹³ and the record and the original are generally made evidence of the facts therein contained,⁹⁴ but other legal evidence is not excluded by the fact that this means of proof is made competent.⁹⁵

§ 224. Certificate of Sale

- a. In general
- b. Form and contents
- c. Assignment
- d. Effect

a. In General

A certificate of sale is a statutory instrument which states the proceedings at the sale and conveys a certain interest to the purchaser subject to the debtor's right of redemption. In a proper case the certificate may be amended or canceled.

A certificate of sale is a statutory instrument, signed by the sheriff, stating what took place at the sale, conveying the equitable interest in the property to the purchaser or giving him a lien, subject to be defeated by redemption on the part of the judgment debtor, and it constitutes evidence of the purchaser's right to a deed.⁹⁶

In states where by statute a certain time after the sale in which to redeem is given to the execution defendant the officer who makes the sale is usually required by statute to give a certificate of the sale to the purchaser.⁹⁷ It has been held that the sale is consummated, not on payment of the bid, but on the delivery to the purchaser of the certificate of sale.⁹⁸ However, statutes providing for the certificate are generally held to be merely directory,⁹⁹ and do not require the certificate as a prerequisite to a sheriff's deed;¹ nor will the failure to execute and deliver a certificate vitiate the sale.² The purchaser cannot require,³ nor has the sheriff authority to execute,⁴ a certificate before payment is made; but if it is issued before such payment it has been held that the sale is valid and the execution debtor can hold the sheriff responsible for the unpaid portion of the amount bid,⁵ but there is other authority which holds that a certificate issued without payment is void.⁶

Amendment. An insufficient certificate may be amended by permission of the court,⁷ even after the officer's term has expired.⁸ A party aggrieved may compel a sheriff, by motion, to correct an omission in a certificate,⁹ but such party may not resort to a court of equity for relief.¹⁰

Cancellation of certificate. A creditor who has bid in his debtor's interest in land at an execution sale and who has given a full or partial satisfaction as consideration therefor without having knowledge or reason to know that the premises were so encumbered as to leave nothing of value belonging to his debtor is entitled to a cancellation of the certificate, if he acts within a reasonable time and if the rights of third persons more deserving of protection have not intervened.¹¹ A proceeding to vacate a certificate of sale is governed by equitable rules, the ultimate question being whether it is inequitable or unconscionable for the debtor to avail himself of the satisfaction.¹²

Construction. The certificate will be construed in favor of a compliance with the law, where there are inconsistent statements, one of which is as to the performance of an official duty in accordance with the law and the other is as to its performance otherwise than as directed by the statute.¹³

The certificate of sale should comply with the statutory requirements as to its form and contents, but slight mistakes and inaccuracies are immaterial. In some states it should be acknowledged, but it need not be attested or be under seal.

The certificate of sale should comply with the statutory regulations as to its form and contents, which in some jurisdictions require that it give the names of the parties to the suit and of the purchaser, the dates of the judgment and of the sale, a description of the property sold, the amounts of the judgment and of the bid, and the time when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed.¹⁴ It should state facts and not conclusions of law;¹⁵ it should describe, with certainty, the premises sold,¹⁶ although it is sufficient if the premises are described with such accuracy that they may be identified.¹⁷

Under some statutes the issuance of the execution need not be stated in the certificate;¹⁸ but, where the execution is required to be described, a description which identifies it beyond any reasonable doubt is sufficient, although incorrect as to the court rendering judgment.¹⁹ The whole amount for which the property was sold must be stated.²⁰ A statement in the certificate that the proper notices of sale were given supplies any deficiency in the printer's affidavit.²¹

Slight mistakes or inaccuracies in the certificate, which produce no injury, are immaterial;²² and mistakes in the certificate, which are corrected by the public records, and for which the purchaser is not responsible, cannot be taken advantage of by a third person who is a purchaser of the judgment debtor.²³ In jurisdictions where the law declares that property sold under execution is subject to redemption, the omission to state in the certificate that the property is subject to redemption will not affect the validity of the sale or deprive the document of effect as a certificate showing the sale on decree.²⁴

Void deed as certificate. A sheriff's deed given before the expiration of the time for redemption is void as a deed, see infra § 270, but it may be given effect as a certificate of sale where it contains the necessary statutory requirements of such a certificate.²⁵

Acknowledgment. It has been held that a certificate should be acknowledged in the same manner as a deed.²⁶ Under some statutes, however, acknowledgment is not necessary.²⁷

Attestation and seal. The certificate need not be attested by witnesses or be under seal.²⁸

c. Assignment

A certificate of sale is assignable, provided the statutory requirements are complied with.

A certificate of sale is assignable²⁹ and, as appears infra § 313, the assignee, in general, acquires all the rights and remedies of his assignor in the property, but no more. However, statutory requirements as to the assignment must be complied with,³⁰ unless they are such as may be waived, and such waiver is made.³¹

In some jurisdictions statutes require that an assignment of a certificate shall be witnessed and acknowledged³² and recorded.³³

d. Effect

In the absence of statute, a certificate of sale of land passes no title to the purchaser and does not disturb the possession of the execution defendant until the time for redemption has expired and the deed has been delivered, although the certificate is evidence of an equitable estate, constitutes the holder a purchaser for registration purposes, and confers seizin for purposes of escheats.

Under some statutes a certificate of sale of real property vests in the purchaser the legal title subject to the right of redemption only,³⁴ but in the absence of statute a certificate of purchase at a sale of land passes no title to the purchaser and will not disturb the possession of defendant in execution until after the time of redemption has expired and his title is transferred by the sheriff's deed.³⁵ However, the certificate constitutes evidence of an equitable estate or interest in the property, subject to be defeated by redemption within the time allowed,³⁶ although at most it is only evidence of an inchoate estate, which may or may not ripen into an absolute title.³⁷

§ 226. Confirmation

- a. In general
- b. Procedure
- c. Determination of motion
- d. Effect of order
- e. Vacation of order; collateral attack

a. In General

Confirmation of an execution sale is unnecessary, unless required by statute, as is the case in a number of jurisdictions, some of which make it essential to the passing of title. It is a purely statutory proceeding wherein inquiry is made as to whether the sale was in conformity with the law, and should be distinguished from confirmation of a judicial sale.

In the absence of statute requiring it, no order of confirmation of an execution sale is necessary,⁴¹ although, where the notice of sale provides for confirmation, the purchaser cannot contend that confirmation was unnecessary.⁴²

In some jurisdictions, by statutory enactment, the proceedings of the officer conducting an execution sale are required to be reported to the court from whence the writ under which the officer acted emanated, for the confirmation or disapproval of the sale, and under such statutes an execution sale is not complete until it has been confirmed by the court.⁴³ Although it is held in some of these jurisdictions that where the proceedings are regular in other respects a mere failure to have the sale confirmed as required by statute will not defeat the purchaser's title,⁴⁴ especially on a collateral attack by one who does not claim through or under the judgment debtor,⁴⁵ in other jurisdictions until the court has determined that the sale has been legally made and has confirmed the sale and ordered the sheriff to make a deed the title does not pass to the purchaser,⁴⁶ the judgment creditor is not entitled to the purchase money,⁴⁷ the sheriff has no authority to make a deed to the purchaser,⁴⁸ and the purchaser is not entitled to the possession of the land.⁴⁹

Confirmation of an execution sale is a purely statutory proceeding⁵⁰ and is to be distinguished from confirmation of a judicial sale.⁵¹ On confirmation of an execution sale the court inquires whether the sale has been made in conformity with law, from an inspection of the proceedings of the officer.⁵²

quirements, sufficiently shows confirmation of an execution sale.⁵³

b. Procedure

Confirmation is generally ex parte, and may be made at any time after the sheriff has made his return, on the application of plaintiff, defendant, the sheriff, or any other person interested therein. In some jurisdictions only the judgment debtor or his representative may object to confirmation, but in other jurisdictions either party or the purchaser may object, or the court may deny confirmation on its own motion.

When the sheriff's return of sale comes before the court for confirmation, the proceeding may be, and commonly is, ex parte.⁵⁴ Confirmation may take place without any notice thereof,⁵⁵ on the application of plaintiff, defendant, the sheriff, or any other person interested therein,⁵⁶ including the purchaser or assignee of the purchaser,⁵⁷ or on the court's own motion,⁵⁸ and with or without the consent of the sheriff.⁵⁹ If one of the judgment debtors dies after the sale, it is not necessary to revive the action before the confirmation of the sale.⁶⁰

Objections to the sale should be presented to the court when the application for confirmation is heard.⁶¹

Persons entitled to object. It has been stated that no one can object to confirmation except the judgment debtor, or, in case of his death, his representative;⁶² but there is authority which holds that either party to the execution sale or the purchaser thereat may object to its confirmation,⁶³ or the court may deny confirmation on its own motion where sufficient grounds appear on the face of the proceedings.⁶⁴ However, a mere creditor,⁶⁵ or judgment creditor,⁶⁶ or a purchaser, or the successor of a purchaser, at a prior and different execution sale,⁶⁷ who is not a party, cannot oppose the confirmation.

Time for confirming sale. No particular time is required for the confirmation of a sale, and it may be confirmed at any time after the sheriff has made his return.⁶⁸

c. Determination of Motion

On proceedings to confirm an execution sale only matters appearing of record are considered, and if it appears therefrom that the sale proceedings were regular and in substantial compliance with the law the sale will be confirmed. As a general rule the court may not inquire into the regularity or merits of the judgment.

In some jurisdictions confirmation of execution sales is a matter within the sound discretion of the court,⁶⁹ which must be exercised on equitable principles and not arbitrarily.⁷⁰ In other jurisdictions confirmation constitutes a ministerial act only,⁷¹ and the statute requiring confirmation is strictly construed in order that the confidence of bidders and the public in such sales be upheld.⁷²

On proceedings to confirm an execution sale, only matters appearing of record may be considered.⁷³ The court cannot look beyond the return of the officer,⁷⁴ which, in order to justify confirmation, must affirmatively show that he complied with the law.⁷⁵

Although it has been held that the validity of the judgment may be inquired into,⁷⁶ as a general rule the court should confine itself to a consideration of questions relating to the regularity of the sale proceedings,⁷⁷ and may not properly inquire into the regularity⁷⁸ or merits⁷⁹ of the judgment on which the execution is based. The subjects for determination are the regularity of the levy, appraisalment, advertising, sale and return of the sheriff;⁸⁰ antecedent proceedings are not disturbed.⁸¹ However, the court may refuse to confirm a sale on equitable grounds under certain exceptional conditions of fact, which are limited to equitable considerations which affect or interfere with the procedural machinery of the sale, or which tend to impeach its adequacy to establish the value of the subject matter.⁸²

after it has carefully examined the proceedings of the officer and is satisfied that such sale was in all respects made in conformity with the law.⁸³ Confirmation may be had of an execution sale of realty which was conducted substantially in the manner prescribed by the notice and in accordance with the decree.⁸⁴ If the officer's return on its face shows that the proceedings were regular, and no equitable grounds for setting aside the sale are shown, it is the duty of the court to confirm the sale;⁸⁵ and a failure to comply literally with all the provisions of the law relating to the sale does not justify a refusal to confirm, where such failure is not prejudicial.⁸⁶ Confirmation should not be refused because the execution debtor had no title,⁸⁷ or because the appraisalment was irregular, where it was not fraudulent,⁸⁸ or, although there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁹ because the property sold was exempt.⁹⁰

Homestead right

The homestead right of exemption of real property is not a proper sub-

On the other hand, confirmation may be denied where the sale was not conducted in accordance with the decree;⁹¹ or substantially in the manner prescribed by the notice;⁹² as where it was not held at the time fixed by the notice of sale;⁹³ or where the execution under which the sale was made was void;⁹⁴ or where the property was not sold subject to prior liens;⁹⁵ or where the sales proceedings included items not found in the judgment;⁹⁶ or where it appears on the face of the proceedings that the judgment is dormant;⁹⁷ or where the judgment on which the execution was based had been satisfied at the time of the sale;⁹⁸ or where the debtor pays the judgment in full after the sale;⁹⁹ or where the judgment creditor, after consulting with the bidder, makes other arrangements to secure the payment of his judgment and the debtor in reliance thereon expends money on the property.¹

In a jurisdiction where the judgment debtor may redeem realty sold on execution but cannot redeem personally, it is error to confirm a sale on execution of realty and personally in one unsegregated bid and for a lump sum.²

Inadequacy of price. Mere inadequacy of price is not a ground for refusing to confirm the sale,³ but confirmation may be denied where the price is so inadequate as to shock the conscience of the court or to amount to evidence of fraud,⁴ or where the purchase price is grossly inadequate and the sale was not conducted in a prudent and just manner and an announcement chilled the bidding.⁵

Modification of terms of sale. On the hearing of the motion by the court, it should either confirm or set aside the sale, but should not modify its terms.⁶

Confirmation of resale. It is proper for the court to confirm a second sale of land at a price much less than that bid at the first sale but which is not less than the value of the realty where the bidder refused to make his bid on the first sale good, it appearing that at the first sale the conduct of the attorney for the execution creditor caused confusion and misunderstanding which resulted in the bidder exceeding his authority by bidding an amount greater than that authorized by his principal and in excess of the value of the land.⁷

- (1) In general
- (2) Cure of irregularities

(1) In General

An order confirming an execution sale is res judicata as to all matters presented by and pertaining to the order of sale or execution and the steps taken thereunder, at least as to parties who had notice thereof, but it is not res judicata as to matters not apparent on the record. The order relates back to the date of the sale.

An order confirming an execution sale is res judicata as to all matters presented by and pertaining to the order of sale or execution and the steps tak-

tion of execution sale of realty, excluding testimony showing actual value was error where objecting party shows fraud or other circumstances which prevented property from bringing reasonable value.—Miller v. Gray Eagle Oil & Gas Co., 23 P.2d 657, 164 Okl. 259.

Inadequacy not sufficient

Testimony valuing realty sold for six thousand dollars at from six thousand five hundred dollars to seven thousand eight hundred dollars, with no assurance of a higher bid in case of another sale, does not show inadequacy of price sufficient to shock the conscience of the court or constitute evidence of fraud.—Wolcott v. Wiles, 257 N.W. 533, 128 Neb. 65.

en thereunder.⁸ It is an adjudication that the proceedings of the officer as they appear of record are regular,⁹ and constitutes a direction to the sheriff to complete the sale;¹⁰ and unless reversed or set aside in a direct proceeding the order is conclusive as to everything found by the court that is essential to its legality,¹¹ except as to matters not apparent on the record.¹²

The only matter settled and adjudicated in the proceedings and order of confirmation is as to the proceedings of the sheriff and those acting under and with him, in the levy, appraisalment, advertising, making and returning of the sale.¹³ The statutory order of confirmation of an execution sale has an entirely different effect from a common-law confirmation of a judicial sale, so far as being res judicata is concerned.¹⁴ It is not res judicata as to any contention that the execution is void or fraudulent,¹⁵ nor is it an adjudication that the property sold was lawfully subject to sale.¹⁶ Further, it is not res judicata in an action to recover the land founded on such sale so as to preclude the introduction of evidence to show fraud in the conduct of the sale, or that it was based on a void judgment.¹⁷ Where, by statute, the adjudication is ex parte, it is not binding on any one as res judicata,¹⁸ and where the scope of the inquiry is merely to ascertain whether the report of the sheriff shows on its face that the sale has been in conformity to the statutes, the confirmation can, in no event, be res

judicata as to matters not disclosed by such report.¹⁹ If the purchaser procures a confirmation of the sale, in fraud of the debtor, the purchaser's deed is invalid.²⁰

Relation back. The order in the confirmation proceedings relates back to the date of the execution sale.²¹

(2) Cure of Irregularities

Defects and irregularities in the proceedings up to and including the sale are cured by the confirmation, but matters which are not mere irregularities, or which form no part of the proceedings connected with the sale, are not cured.

The rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that the confirmation cures all defects and irregularities in the proceedings up to and including the sale, where the court making the order is one of competent jurisdiction;²² but matters which are not mere irregularities, but which are fatal defects, or which form no part of the proceedings connected with the sale, are not cured by the confirmation,²³ and hence a sale under a judgment paid prior to the sale is not validated by confirmation.²⁴ Fraud in the sale, unknown to the debtor, is not cured.²⁵

In a proper case the order confirming an execution sale may be set aside on timely motion. After the time for such motion has expired relief can be obtained only through an original suit based on some equitable ground.

If the court has jurisdiction the order cannot be collaterally attacked.

The order confirming an execution sale may be set aside on motion in a proper case.²⁶ Irregularities by the sheriff usually do not constitute sufficient ground to set aside an order of confirmation,²⁷ unless prejudice is shown;²⁸ it is only steps omitted or defectively performed which are deemed material to the jurisdiction of the court to proceed, and which render the proceeding void, that justify the vacation of the order.²⁹ An order confirming a sale made under a void execution should be set aside,³⁰ as may also an order confirming a sale made by a sheriff after the order of sale and special execution has been recalled and withdrawn,³¹ or after the judgment has been satisfied.³²

A motion to vacate an order of confirmation may be made within the term during which the sale was confirmed,³³ and must be made at or within the time fixed by statute,³⁴ except that if the order of confirmation is void a motion to set it aside may be made at any time thereafter.³⁵ Exceptions to the confirmations of sheriff's sales are in due course if presented prior to delivery of the sheriff's deed even though after acknowledgment thereof.³⁶ After the time for such motion has expired, the order can be set aside only through an original suit based upon some equitable ground for relief.³⁷

Jurisdiction of court to entertain request to vacate confirmation of a sheriff's sale is properly invoked by application in form of petition.—Cooper v. State ex rel. Com'rs of Land Office, 63 P.2d 698, 178 Okl. 532.

Admissibility and examination of entire record

On motion to set aside an order of confirmation of execution sale on the ground that the execution was not legally issued and returned, it is competent and proper to examine the entire record for the purpose of determining the validity of the execution and to permit the introduction of the record for that purpose is not error. Appraisal by persons not designated

The fact that levying sheriff, in making reappraisal of real estate, selected three appraisers other than those who originally appraised the realty in contravention of court order that a reappraisal be made by the same persons as originally appraised it, did not constitute an "irregularity" warranting setting aside order of confirmation and sale of the real estate.—Toohey v. After a person's exceptions to the confirmation have been overruled, he cannot move to have the confirmation set aside on other grounds, without alleging that he had no information as to such grounds when he filed his exceptions, and without showing that his substantial rights are affected by the confirmation.³⁸

Collateral attack. Where the court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter in the confirmation proceeding, its order cannot be attacked collaterally.³⁹

Objection by injured party only

Objection to sale of property on ground of inadequacy of price may be made only by injured party.—

cution, another person claiming to be the owner thereof, and interested in defeating the sale, may, although he may not be a party to the execution, move the court to set aside such sale,⁴² whether his title is legal or equitable,⁴³ although it has been held that a person who has a good and valid title to the property sufficient to enable him to defend successfully an action of ejectment brought for its recovery cannot move to set aside the sale.⁴⁴ As a general rule a person not a party to the record has no standing in court on a motion to vacate an execution sale on the ground of mere irregularities, which can be urged only by the execution debtor.⁴⁵

Highest bidder. If an officer fraudulently refuses to accept the highest bid of a responsible person and accepts a lower bid, the highest bidder can, by an application to the court from which the execution issued, have such sale set aside and a resale ordered, to commence at the amount of his bid.⁴⁶

Trustee in bankruptcy. A trustee for creditors of a bankrupt can attack an execution sale on a judgment recovered against the bankrupt prior to bankruptcy.⁴⁷

b. Execution Debtor; Purchaser from Debtor

The execution debtor, and his purchaser or assignee, are entitled to move or sue to set aside the execution sale for irregularities therein, provided they were prejudiced.

As a general rule the execution defendant may avail himself of irregularities in the conduct of the sale or in the levy of the execution and is entitled to move or sue to set the sale aside.⁴⁸ He cannot, however, so move where he is not prejudiced,⁴⁹ as

where the error complained of operates only as an injury to the creditor;⁵⁰ or where he has assigned his interest,⁵¹ unless the conveyance was with a general warranty by which he is compelled to make good the title of the assignee or purchaser;⁵² or where he has become a bankrupt;⁵³ or where the property sold belongs to a codefendant.⁵⁴

Where the sale is under an execution against two or more, all of them should be made parties to the motion, and a motion by one only is erroneous.⁵⁵

Purchaser or assignee of debtor. A purchaser from the execution debtor of property later sold at execution sale under a judgment which was a lien on the property at the time he purchased it is not precluded from attacking the execution sale.⁵⁶ Further, a purchaser from the execution debtor, who purchases after the execution sale, may bring an action to avoid such sale where there was no adverse possession by the purchaser at the sheriff's sale at the time of the subsequent conveyance.⁵⁷ However, as is true in the case of the execution debtor, see supra this subdivision, a purchaser or assignee of the property from the execution debtor cannot move to set aside the execution sale where he was not prejudiced by the irregularity complained of.⁵⁸ In some jurisdictions, under the rule that one who is not injured by the execution sale cannot move for its vacation, see supra subdivision a of this section a purchaser from the execution debtor of property later sold at execution sale is not entitled to move for the vacation of the execution sale where his title as against the execution purchaser

Want of authority in purchaser

Want of authority of trustee of municipal corporations, who purchased at execution sale with money belonging to such corporations, is not cause for complaint by the debtor's assignee, since the law raises a resulting trust in favor of the municipal corporations and the sale is such that he may successfully defend an action brought for its recovery,⁵⁹ as where he purchased the property prior to the rendition of the judgment under which the execution issued,⁶⁰ or after it had ceased to be a lien thereon.⁶¹ In other jurisdictions under a statute authorizing any person interested in the real estate to move to set aside an execution sale thereof, a purchaser from the execution debtor of property subsequently sold at execution sale and which was exempt from the lien of the judgment may move to set aside the sale.⁶² A purchaser from the execution debtor of land subject to the lien of the judgment, which land was afterward sold under such judgment, cannot set aside the execution sale on the ground that the execution defendant had, at the time, other lands and personalty sufficient to satisfy the execution.⁶³

An assignee of the rights of the debtor, interested in the surplus obtained on the sale, may move to set it aside.⁶⁴

c. Execution Creditor

The execution creditor may move to vacate the sale for some irregularity, misconduct, or mistake prejudicial to his interests.

Under some circumstances an execution creditor may have the sale vacated on account of some irregularity, misconduct, or mistake resulting in a sale for an inadequate price, or in a sale of property not belonging to the debtor, thus leaving his judgment wholly or partially unsatisfied.⁶⁵ However, the creditor is not in a position to deny the validity of the writ, as a ground for setting aside the sale,⁶⁶ nor can he attack the sale on the ground that the property sold in reality belonged to him.⁶⁷

d. Execution Purchaser

The purchaser at an execution sale may move to vacate the sale on account of irregularities which cause a failure in his title, or for any other reason rendering it unconscionable to enforce his bid.

The purchaser at an execution sale may move to vacate the sale on account of such irregularities in the proceedings as to fail to give him a title, or for any other reason rendering it unconscionable to enforce his bid.⁶⁸ However, the purchaser cannot have the sale set aside because of want of title of the debtor, where he knew of the defect in the title at the time of his purchase.⁶⁹ If the property is resold on failure to pay the bid, the first purchaser can avail himself of any irregularity in the second sale.⁷⁰

e. Other Lien Creditors

Judgment and execution creditors of the execution debtor may question the validity of an execution sale, provided they suffer injury as a result of the sale.

Judgment and execution creditors undoubtedly have such an interest in the property of their debtor as will entitle them, on sufficient grounds, to question the validity of an execution sale thereof.⁷¹ However, where the ground of objection is merely that the execution was irregular, or that there were irregularities in the conduct of the officer, a motion to vacate the sale cannot be made by plaintiff in another execution,⁷² or by another judgment creditor,⁷³ the rule, as appears in subdivision a of this section supra, being that mere irregularities can ordinarily be attacked only by the execution debtor. If the sale is valid as against the debtor, it is also valid as against his creditors.⁷⁴

In any event, a creditor cannot move to set aside the sale unless he has been injured or lost some advantage thereby;⁷⁵ and hence subsequent judgment creditors cannot ordinarily attack the sale.⁷⁶ However, junior lien creditors may attack the sale where, by reason of irregularities, the property has brought less than it would have brought at a fair sale.⁷⁷

§ 228. — Waiver and Estoppel

- a. In general
- b. Execution debtor
- c. Execution creditor
- d. Purchaser
- e. Third persons

a. In General

A person may waive formalities required in the conduct of an execution sale or be estopped by his conduct from attacking its validity.

The rule is well recognized that the formalities required to be observed in the conduct of execution sales are designed for the protection and benefit of those interested in the property and its proceeds, and may be waived by their common consent.⁸² A person may, by his acquiescence in a sheriff's sale, his participation in or ratification of acts of irregularity, or by the acceptance of the benefits of such sale with knowledge that it was not properly conducted, be estopped from afterward asking to have it vacated either by motion or by a suit in equity;⁸³ and parties acquiescing in the setting aside of the sale and ordering a resale are bound thereby.⁸⁴

There is no waiver or estoppel, however, unless all the elements necessary to create a waiver or an estoppel in pais are present.⁸⁵ Thus a motion to set aside the sale will not be denied on the ground that the moving party is estopped from questioning the validity of the sale, where it is not shown that he knew his rights at the time when he did the acts relied on to constitute a waiver or estoppel.⁸⁶

The execution debtor may be estopped by his conduct from attacking the validity of the sale, as where he participates therein, or assents thereto, or fails to object when he should.

The execution debtor may be estopped by his conduct from attacking the sale,⁸⁷ as where he participates in, or has knowledge of and assents to, irreg-

(1) Stipulation by defendant with plaintiff that court might overrule his motion to set aside judgment and recall execution, and that, if he failed to pay judgment within time stipulated, plaintiff might proceed as advised waived objections to validity of sale made after defendant failed to pay as agreed.—McClelland v. Leahy, 227 P. 549, 75 Colo. 542.

(2) Where sheriff sold more land than necessary, and the debtor, not using ordinary diligence for more than a year to discover this fact, induced defendant to purchase the land so sold from the assignee of the execution purchaser, he is estopped from asserting a claim with or against such purchaser.—Burford v. Burford, 4 Ky.Op. 463.

(3) Judgment debtor negotiating sale of portion of judgment remaining unpaid after sheriff's sale for creditor, in order to release judgment lien on debtors' other land, is estopped from setting aside sheriff's sale.—McGlothlin v. Scott, Tex.Com. App., 48 S.W.2d 610, affirming Scott v. McGlothlin, Civ.App., 30 S.W.2d 511.

(4) Other cases see 23 C.J. p 667 note 66 [a].

Facts not constituting waiver or estoppel

(1) Judgment defendant's delay of four years after the sale in suing to set it aside did not create estoppel as against subsequent purchaser, where it was disputed that she waited any considerable time after knowing of sale.—Mahan v. Tavern Rock, 37 S.W.2d 562, 327 Mo. 391.

(2) Partners not served and not appearing, in action brought against partnership as corporation, is not estopped from suing in trover against purchaser at execution sale.—McGeorge v. Danforth, Mo.App., 39 S.W.2d 565.

(3) Where, in an action to set aside a sheriff's deed as a cloud on plaintiff's title, on the ground that judgment on which execution was issued had been paid, and there was no showing that plaintiff by any ularities in the conduct of the sale,⁸⁸ or bids on⁸⁹ or purchases⁹⁰ the property at the sale. Provisions for the benefit of the debtor, relating to the writ, levy, or sale, may ordinarily be waived by him,⁹¹ unless he is in failing circumstances,⁹² as by failure to object to a sale en masse.⁹³ A change in the terms of the sale more favorable to the debtor will be presumed to have been made at his instance, and he is estopped from contesting it.⁹⁴ Objections may be waived by failure to move to quash the writ,⁹⁵ or, in some states, by failure to object to the confirmation of the sale.⁹⁶

Surrender of possession by the debtor does not estop him to attack a void sale.⁹⁷ There is no estoppel to deny the validity of the execution merely because of a prior motion before the sale to stay the levy and sale on other grounds;⁹⁸ but it has been held that successive applications to stay execution on grounds not impeaching the judgment preclude setting aside the sale for defects in the judgment.⁹⁹ An attempt to redeem the property has been held not to estop the execution defendant from attacking the validity of the sale where it does not appear that the purchaser has taken a position or done anything he would not have done had the debtor not attempted to redeem,¹ or where it did not prejudice the execution creditor,² or where the proceedings are void for want of jurisdiction.³ The fact that the execution debtor pays the balance of the judgment after crediting the amount realized from the execution sale does not estop him from attacking the sale.⁴

Inducing party to purchase. Where the judgment debtor has induced a party to become a purchaser at a sale of his property under execution, he is estopped to set up the invalidity of the judgment on which such execution issued,⁵ or a mistake in the notice of sale,⁶ or irregularity because of failure act intended that defendant should act on his conduct or representations, plaintiff, although not present at execution sale, was not estopped to claim that it was void.—Geanakapulas v. Zographos, 208 P. 585, 104 Or. 430.

Inaction

(1) Owner of realty who did not know that realty was being sold at execution sale was not estopped to attack validity of execution sale by failure to take steps to prevent sale at time thereof.—Jones v. Alford, La.App., 172 So. 213.

(2) Where judgment debtors given only twenty-four hours' notice to appoint appraiser before sheriff's sale made no appointment, they did not waive their right to two days' notice.—Mulling v. Jones, 97 So. 202, 153 La. 1091.

Provision that property be in view at sale

(1) To effect waiver of statute requiring that, at time of sale under execution, personalty must be present and in view of people attending sale, waiver must be given by judgment debtor for whose benefit statute was enacted and not by the judgment creditor.—Stoner v. Oneida Motor Car Co., 275 N.Y.S. 426, 154 Misc. 97.

(2) Judgment debtor who, shortly before execution sale of furniture in apartment house, removed some of attached property and ordered all tenants of house to keep their doors locked, waived right to object that property was not within view of those attending sale as required by statute, especially where his attorney stated to officer making sale that there was no way of getting to property, and that it might be sold just as it was.—*Colver v. Without knowledge of sale

Property owner who attempted to repurchase property from judgment creditor without knowledge that property had been sold at public sale and purchased by judgment creditor, but in belief that property had been taken by judgment creditor for payment of debt, is not estopped to attack the validity of the sale.—Jones v. Alford, supra.

to sell in parcels,⁷ or otherwise question the validity of the sale.⁸

Acceptance of surplus. A judgment debtor who accepts the surplus realized from the sale of his property on execution and retains it with knowledge of defects which would render the sale voidable is estopped to attack the sale.⁹

Where judgment is dormant or void. An execution debtor whose property is sold under a dormant or void judgment is not estopped from asserting title to the property, as against the holder of a sheriff's deed, merely because he failed to take steps to arrest the sale under such dormant or void judgment.¹⁰ His presence at the sale, without objection, is no estoppel where he did not know that the judgment was dormant.¹¹

c. Execution Creditor

The execution creditor cannot ratify a void sale, but he may be estopped to attack the validity of the sale.

The execution creditor cannot ratify a void sale;¹² but he may be estopped to attack the validity of the sale.¹³ When not transcending the mandate of his writ, the sheriff may be considered in some degree as the judgment creditor's agent, and the latter is as a rule estopped from assailing the validity of a sale made by virtue of such writ.¹⁴ Where the execution creditor receives from the sheriff the proceeds of an execution sale, with full knowledge of the manner of its conduct, and without making any objection to the sale, he is thereafter estopped from attacking its validity.¹⁵ However, the silence of an agent of the creditor is no waiver of objection to the goods being sold in too large parcels.¹⁶

The creditor is not estopped to set up the purchaser's want of capacity to take the title,¹⁷ or a fraudulent purchase by one in reality his agent;¹⁸ nor is the creditor, where he first protested against the sale, estopped from contesting its validity by subsequently bidding thereat.¹⁹ A waiver by defendant will not prevent his creditors who were prejudiced by an irregularity from avoiding or vacating the sale by appropriate method.²⁰

A purchaser at an execution sale may be estopped to deny the validity of the sale.

A purchaser at an execution sale may be thereafter estopped from denying the validity of the sale,²¹ as where he executes a sale bond,²² or obtains a deed, takes possession, and conveys by warranty deed.²³ He cannot have the sale set aside on the ground that the title to the property sold was in himself or in a third person.²⁴

A defaulting bidder at a first sale is not estopped to contest the validity of a resale for defects in the notice of sale which existed at the first sale at which he bid.²⁵ A chattel mortgagee, who bids in the equity of redemption at an execution sale, is not estopped to deny the validity of such sale, especially where the sale is void.²⁶

A lienor or claimant to property sold under execution may be estopped from attacking the validity of the sale, as where he accepts the proceeds of the sale or a part thereof, or stands by without objection and sees the property sold.

A lienor or claimant to property sold under execution may by his acts or his acquiescence in the sale be estopped from attacking its validity,²⁷ as where he accepts the proceeds of the sale or a part thereof.²⁸ However, one who is in no sense a party to the record or execution sale is not estopped from attacking its validity, merely because he has derived some collateral and incidental benefit therefrom.²⁹

Although there is authority to the contrary,³⁰ it has been held that a person cannot stand by without objection and see his property sold at execution sale as that of another without being estopped thereafter to assert his title.³¹ However, to create such an estoppel it is essential that the purchaser shall have been misled by the owner's silence, and that he shall have been induced thereby to make the purchase.³² The fact that the owner bid at a protested sale will not estop him from asserting title to the property;³³ nor will the failure to object estop one who seeks recovery from the sheriff to whom he had made a specific claim of title before the sale;³⁴ nor will the giving to the sheriff of an indemnifying bond by the purchaser estop the true owner who claimed the property at the time of the sale from later claiming it.³⁵ Knowledge by the owner that his property has been levied on as the property of another cannot, without more, authorize a finding that he consented to the sale at which he was not present, and he is therefore not estopped from thereafter asserting title against the purchaser.³⁶ The failure to file a claim,³⁷ or the withdrawal of a claim to land levied on,³⁸ and permitting the sale to take place, does not estop the claimant from afterwards asserting his title to the property levied on and sold, where the claimant does nothing else to induce the purchaser to buy or to entrap him.

The failure of remaindermen to object within a reasonable time to the purchase of the property on execution sale by the life tenant and executor of the estate in his individual capacity will prevent their claiming an interest therein.³⁹

A surety on a stay of execution is not estopped to show that the judgment recited is a nullity;⁴⁰ and a surety on a delivery bond which merely binds the obligor to have the property or its value forthcoming for the satisfaction of the judgment is not estopped to assert a right in himself to the property and show that it should not be used to satisfy the judgment.⁴¹

§ 229. Presumption of Validity

In the absence of proof to the contrary, which must be clear and satisfactory, it will be presumed, except as to those things which the law requires to be recorded, that the requirements of the law were complied with in respect of an execution sale and the proceedings in connection therewith.

It is necessary for a purchaser relying on a sheriff's deed to show those things which the law requires to be recorded.⁴² All other matters will be presumed.⁴³ In the absence of proof to the contrary, which must be clear and satisfactory,⁴⁴ the

Acts not constituting estoppel

(1) Where property sold under conditional sales contract was removed without owner's consent to another state, attached and sold under execution sale before expiration of ten days after notice to seller of removal, fact that owner allowed courts will as a general rule indulge all presumptions in favor of the regularity of the judgment, execution, and levy on which an execution sale was founded, and of all proceedings in connection with the sale;⁴⁵ and the execution purchaser is not affected by matters subsequent to the sale arising between parties to the judgment to which he is a stranger.⁴⁶ Thus, in the absence of contrary evidence, it will be presumed that the law was complied with in respect of the order of offering the property for sale,⁴⁷ the levy,⁴⁸ the interest sold,⁴⁹ the time of the issuance of the writ,⁵⁰ notice,⁵¹ the time of the levy, see supra § 93, and the time of the sale, see supra § 208.

On the other hand, it has been held that it will not be presumed that leave of court to issue the execution, as required by statute, was granted,⁵² although there is authority to the contrary.⁵³ The validity of the sale will not be presumed where the fact that the sale was in violation of a statute is apparent on the face of the record through which the title is claimed.⁵⁴ There is no presumption in favor of the regularity of the sale of property of a third person.⁵⁵ It has been held that one asserting the existence of a judgment lien to support an execution sale under a judgment, the lien of which lapses at the expiration of a certain time from the date the judgment is docketed, has the burden of proving as against a purchaser of the property for value that the execution was issued within the time required after the docketing of the judgment.⁵⁶

Second execution for same amount. In attacking the validity of a sheriff's deed, the circumstance that a second execution issued years after the registration of the sheriff's deed for the same amount as the first, if it is any evidence, is not conclusive that there was no previous sale or avails under it.⁵⁷

B. OPENING OR VACATING, AND COLLATERAL ATTACK

§ 230. Grounds for Opening or Vacating in General

The usual grounds for setting aside an execution sale, where there is resulting injury or prejudice, are fraud, mistake, and irregularity.

The general policy of the law is to sustain execution sales,⁵⁸ and such a sale cannot be set aside except for some good and sufficient reason,⁵⁹ which exists in fact,⁶⁰ but may be set aside for about the same reasons that judicial sales, in the strict meaning of the term, may be set aside.⁶¹ Comprehensively stated, the grounds on which an execution sale may be set aside, where there is resulting injury or prejudice, are fraud, mistake, and irregularity;⁶² but, as appears hereinafter in this section and in §§ 231, 232, an irregularity preceding the sale is accorded less favor as a ground for setting aside the sale than one in, or directly connected with, the sale itself, and, in either case, an irregularity, to be ground for setting aside the sale, must be prejudicial and not merely technical.

As dependent on who is purchaser. A sale may be set aside where the purchaser is one chargeable with notice of the objection relied on, even though it would not be set aside if the purchaser were one in good faith and without notice.⁶³

Matters connected with judgment. A motion to set aside the sale does not permit of an inquiry into supposed errors or irregularities involved in the rendition, entry, or amendment of the judgment.⁶⁴ The fact that a judgment is liable to reversal or error does not invalidate an execution sale thereunder made while the judgment is still in force,⁶⁵ and the filing of a bill to set aside such judgment is no ground for a motion to set the sale aside.⁶⁶ However, if the judgment is set aside, the sale should be set aside where the deed has not been delivered.⁶⁷ A sale under a void judgment will be set aside,⁶⁸ as will also a sale under a judgment which has been satisfied.⁶⁹

It has been held that the reversal, after the sale, of the judgment on which the execution issued gives to defendant in execution the right to have the sale set aside if within a reasonable time he so elects, and if no equitable considerations interfere with the exercise of such right;⁷⁰ and that, where the judgment creditor is the purchaser, the sale will be set aside on reversal of a judgment in his favor.⁷¹ On the other hand, it has been held that the fact that the execution plaintiff and the purchaser knew that defendant intended to appeal is not sufficient, on reversal of the judgment, to set aside the sale, where the supersedeas bond was filed before the price was paid, but was not accepted until thereafter;⁷² and that, where plaintiff recovers a second time on a new trial after reversal, the sale will be set aside only on condition that the judgment rendered on the second trial be paid.⁷³

A reduction of the amount of the judgment on appeal is not ground on behalf of the execution creditor who became the purchaser;⁷⁴ and treating a remittitur as a credit on the judgment, instead of entering a new judgment, is not ground for setting aside the sale.⁷⁵

Mistake or surprise. Mistake or surprise in connection with the sale, which results in injury, may be ground for setting aside the sale;⁷⁶ but the mistake must be of the kind which would warrant judicial relief⁷⁷ and not be the result of the negligence of the moving party.⁷⁸ It has been held proper to set aside a sale where there has been a mistake as to the title to the property sold,⁷⁹ or as to its identity,⁸⁰ or as to prior encumbrances on the property,⁸¹

§ 231. Defects or Irregularities in Writ or Levy

An execution sale will not be set aside for defects or irregularities in the execution or levy, unless they are of such a character as to render the writ or levy void.

The courts as a rule will refuse a motion to set aside an execution sale for mere irregularities, as shown by the record, in the execution or levy where the proceedings were not fraudulent or void, and the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction over the parties and the subject matter, particularly where no injury appears as to any of the parties interested⁸³ or where the sale has been validated or legalized by statute.⁸⁴

On the other hand, the sale may be set aside where the writ under which the levy is made is so defective as to render it void,⁸⁵ as where the description of the land levied on is so indefinite that it cannot be located,⁸⁶ or where the execution was not authorized by the judgment on which it purported to be issued,⁸⁷ or where the writ was prematurely returned,⁸⁸ or where the levy was in violation of law.⁸⁹

If one or more, but not all, of the writs under which the sale is made are void, the sale cannot be set aside,⁹⁰ although it has held that, in such case, the sale, although not invalid, is voidable on seasonable application.⁹¹

Absence of a seal on the writ under which the sale was made is or is not ground for holding the sale void and setting it aside accordingly as the lack of the seal does⁹² or does not⁹³ render the writ void.

Excessive execution or levy. An execution sale is not necessarily invalid because the execution was issued for an amount in excess of what was due on the judgment, or because of failure to make a credit on the judgment, where there has been no fraud or want of good faith; and the court will not set aside the sale because of such irregularity.⁹⁴

Irregular or incorrect appraisalment. The sale may be set aside where the appraisalment was not according to law;⁹⁵ but an incorrect appraisalment is ground for setting aside the sale only where it is the product of fraud, or unfairness, or mistake other than one arising merely from an erroneous opinion as to value.⁹⁶

Lack of notice. Failure to serve the execution on the execution debtor or to give him notice of the execution or levy is not ground for setting aside the sale,⁹⁷ except where the land levied on is situated in a county other than the one in which defendant resides and the judgment was rendered, and a statute requires written notice in such case.⁹⁸ Where the judgment creditor, who was the purchaser at the execution sale, had neither actual nor constructive notice of the prior transfer of the stock levied on, his failure to give notice of the levy to the transferee does not warrant the setting aside of the sale.⁹⁹

§ 232. Irregularities or Misconduct Affecting Sale

Fraud in connection with an execution sale is ground for setting the sale aside; the sale may be set aside for an irregularity in the sale or in the notice thereof, unless it is merely a technical, and not a prejudicial, irregularity.

A court of law is competent to control the acts of its officers in the execution of its process, and may, when satisfied that the officer, in the conduct of an execution sale, has been guilty of irregularities, to the injury of any party having an interest in the action, set such sale aside.¹ Under some statutes, a sale may and should be set aside where it was not made in conformity with equity.² However, technical irregularities in a sale which are not shown to have been prejudicial to any of the parties in interest will not furnish sufficient ground for setting it aside,³ especially after confirmation of the sale⁴ which, as noted above in § 226, cures all irregularities in the preliminary proceedings; and the position has been taken that the sale will not be set aside for mere irregularities appearing on the face of the record unless they clearly render the sale void.⁵ When regularly made, an execution sale is not to be set aside except for some trick, artifice, fraud, oppression, or undue advantage.⁶

The sale may be set aside where the officer refused to accept from the debtor the amount due on the judgment with costs;⁷ where the sale was made to a person not authorized to purchase,⁸ or to one other than the highest bidder;⁹ or where the sale was made at an improper time, as where it was made at a time other than that fixed by the notice of sale,¹⁰ or it was made after the time allowed therefor,¹¹ or on a day not authorized by law,¹² or it was made in violation of an agreement for delay or compromise,¹³ or the officer failed to adjourn the sale under circumstances which required it.¹⁴ However, the failure of the sheriff to reopen the sale, after formally closing it, in order to permit further bidding, solely on account of a misapprehension on the part of plaintiff's attorney, is not such an irregularity as authorizes the setting aside of the sale.¹⁵

The sale may be set aside where it was for an amount materially in excess of the amount due,¹⁶ but not where the sum for which the property sold exceeded the actual amount due by several dollars.¹⁷

Fraud of the officer or a party in connection with the sale is ground for setting the sale aside on the motion of, or in a suit by, one prejudiced thereby;¹⁸ and this rule applies, even though no actual fraud was intended, if there was that which in law amounts to fraud.¹⁹

Order in which property sold. A violation of directions as to the order in which the property shall be sold may be ground for setting aside the sale.²⁰ However, where the creditor is not bound to exhaust the property of the debtor in the county where the judgment was rendered before resorting to property in another county, his failure to do so does not warrant the setting aside of the sale;²¹ and a sale of real property before exhausting personal property, in violation of a statute, is not ground for setting aside the sale where the statute is regarded as merely directory,²² the purchaser is without notice of the irregularity,²³ or the motion to set aside is made by the execution plaintiff.²⁴

Property not subject to sale. Where the property sold was not subject to sale, the sale should be set aside,²⁵ as where the officer improperly sold property exempt from execution, or the homestead of defendant in execution.²⁶ Where the execution debtor did not own the property sold, the sale may be set aside on the application of the purchaser;²⁷ but an attack on the sale by either the execution debtor²⁸ or creditor²⁹ will not be sustained on the ground that the interest of the debtor in the property sold was an equitable one or less than sole ownership; and it has been held that the fact that the property sold belongs to the execution creditor, or that he claims an interest therein, does not render the sale void³⁰ or subject to attack by the execution creditor, as only the execution debtor's interest in the property is affected by the sale.³¹

Sale in gross. A sale en masse of separate tracts or parcels, or in some states of property susceptible of natural division, in violation of the statutory or other duty imposed on the sheriff, will be set aside on motion of the person interested, or by bill in equity, where a substantial injury is shown to have been sustained by such party,³² as where the right of redemption is prejudiced;³³ and especially will the court set aside the sale where part of the property sold in bulk was not owned by the debtor or was not legally levied on, so that it is impossible to determine for what the property owned by the debtor and legally levied on sold.³⁴

Some courts require satisfactory evidence that the land could have been advantageously divided and that the sale en masse resulted in injury or prejudice, before setting the sale aside,³⁵ and where it appears that no benefit would have resulted from a division of the property, a sale en masse will not per se be ground for vacating the sale.³⁶ Further, the sale will not be set aside as void for failure to sell the parcels separately where the controlling statute is merely directory.³⁷

Want or inadequacy of notice of sale. Except where an adequate remedy is provided against the officer by a penalty,³⁸ failure by the officer to give the proper notice of sale is sufficient ground for setting it aside where the motion is made at the proper time by an interested party.³⁹ The insufficiency of the notice, such as inadequate or erroneous description of the property or failure to advertise for the statutory period, has been held sufficient to warrant the vacation of the sale,⁴⁰ at least before its confirmation;⁴¹ but mere irregularities in the notice which result in no prejudice to any of the parties are not ground for setting aside the sale.⁴²

Mere inadequacy, or gross inadequacy, of price is not, of itself, a ground for setting aside an execution sale.

Mere inadequacy of price is not, of itself, sufficient ground to set aside an execution sale; inadequacy of price is not ground for setting aside the sale where the sale is regular, proper, and legal in other respects, the parties stand on an equal footing, there are no confidential relations between them, there is no element of fraud, unfairness, or oppression, and there is no misconduct, accident, mistake, or surprise connected with, and tending to cause, the inadequacy.⁴³ This rule is especially applicable where defendant has the right of redemption and has knowledge of the sale and an opportunity to exercise the right, since this affords him ample protection against a sacrifice of his property through a sale for an inadequate price, and if inadequacy of price is the only ground for attacking the sale, relief should be denied and he should be left to resort to his right to redeem.⁴⁴ Mere inadequacy of price is insufficient even though there was only one bidder.⁴⁵ An execution sale will not be set aside for gross inadequacy of price,⁴⁶ unless the inadequacy is so gross as to shock the understanding or the conscience,⁴⁷ or as to amount to fraud, unfairness, or oppression, or satisfactory or conclusive evidence thereof,⁴⁸ or unless defendant makes a timely offer to pay the indebtedness, costs, and interest.⁴⁹

Gross inadequacy of price coupled with other objections see infra § 234.

Sale for mere nominal consideration, such as one for less than a cent an acre, is unconscionable and invalid, and the court is warranted, without more, in setting it aside.—Johnson v. Funk, 297 P. 670, 132 Kan. 793.

Inequitable sale

Under a statute construed to require the court to grant a motion to set aside a sale which was not made in conformity with equity, inadequacy of price alone, without addition of extraneous factors of equitable cognizance, may make a sale inequitable.—Kaw Valley State Bank v. Chumos, 27 P.2d 244, 138 Kan. 714, modified on other grounds 28 P.2d 744, 138 Kan. 921.

Inadequacy as evidential feature of fraud

In a suit to set aside execution sale, inadequacy of price is always an evidential feature of fraud, particularly where the absolute and shameless inadequacy is patent and amounts to the use of legal process to take property from the owner without compensation.—Van Graafeiland v. Wright, 228 S.W. 465, 286 Mo. 414.

Presumption of fraud

The inadequacy of price must be so gross as to create a presumption of fraud.—O'Bryan v. Davis, 15 So. 860, 103 Ala. 429.

49. Okl.—Miller v. Gray Eagle Oil

The debtor cannot have the sale set aside on the ground of inadequacy or gross inadequacy of price where such inadequacy was caused by his acts or acts of those for whom he is responsible,⁵⁰ or where his conduct contributed thereto.⁵¹ A fraudulent grantee of the debtor cannot have the sale set aside for inadequacy,⁵² especially where the inadequacy was caused by the recording of the fraudulent deed.⁵³

While inadequacy of price, unconnected with other matters, is not ground for setting aside the sale, see supra this section, and does not prevent the passing of title⁵⁴ or render the sale subject to collateral attack, see infra § 242, nevertheless, it is not the purpose of the law to protect one who seeks to procure valuable property for little outlay,⁵⁵ and relief to a purchaser under such circumstances will be refused when he goes into equity to enforce the sale.⁵⁶

What constitutes adequate or inadequate price. Where it is sought to set aside an execution sale on the ground of inadequacy of price, and the question is not controlled by statute, the test of inadequacy is not what the property is worth, but what it will bring at a fair sheriff's sale, which, of course, is a forced sale.⁵⁷ It would seem that, where a motion is made to set aside the sale on this ground, a safe rule to follow is to determine whether the sheriff has or has not abused his discretion.⁵⁸ An execution sale will not be set aside on the ground of inadequacy, or gross inadequacy, of price where no facts appear in support of such ground,⁵⁹ or the sale price of the property in question cannot be ascertained because the property was sold with other property as a whole.⁶⁰ The price may not be inadequate or grossly inadequate in view of the encumbrances on the property,⁶¹ it being proper and necessary, in passing on the question of adequacy, to consider such encumbrances,⁶² even though the purchaser was without knowledge thereof and thought that he was purchasing property which was unencumbered and therefore of greater value.⁶³

Where the price is less than that required by statute, as where it is less than a designated proportion of the appraised value of the property,⁶⁴ or is insufficient to discharge existing mortgages having preference over the execution,⁶⁵ it is inadequate and the sale is invalid and subject to vacation in proper proceedings. On the other hand, the price is not inadequate where it equals or exceeds the proportion of the appraised value designated by statute,⁶⁶ and fraud or mistake on the part of the appraisers is not alleged.⁶⁷ The sale is not void where, be-

Judgment debtor, hindering execution sale by public announcement that he had previously filed petition in bankruptcy, could not complain of inadequacy of price.—Wilkinson v. § 234. — Inadequacy Coupled with Other Objections

Gross inadequacy of price, in connection with other circumstances which tend to bring it about, may be ground for setting aside an execution sale.

Where there is gross inadequacy of price and it is connected with fraud, mistake, misapprehension, surprise, or other circumstances which, although not sufficient in themselves to authorize the execution sale to be set aside, tend to bring about such inadequacy, to the injury of the parties interested, the sale may be set aside,⁷⁰ even though actual fraud does not appear.⁷¹ In any event, gross inadequacy of price may be considered in connection with other circumstances in determining the validity and fairness of the sale;⁷² and, when so considered for this purpose, it is important⁷³ and may be controlling.⁷⁴ Each case must depend largely on its own peculiar facts,⁷⁵ and what additional circumstances, in connection with the inadequacy of price, are sufficient to justify setting aside the sale, is largely in the discretion of the court.⁷⁶ As a general rule, the court will seize on slight irregularities or additional circumstances to set aside the sale where the price is grossly inadequate.⁷⁷ Thus, only slight circumstances of unfairness in the conduct of the party benefited by the sale are considered necessary to raise a presumption of fraud,⁷⁸ at least where no question of an innocent purchaser is involved.⁷⁹ It has been held that to avoid an execution sale as against a person claiming to be an innocent purchaser, even where the price paid is inadequate, knowledge of the vice in the sale or some misconduct traceable to him must be shown, and while the courts will often seize upon a slight circumstance to add to the weight of inadequacy of price to turn the scale, yet it must be shown that the purchaser is in some measure responsible for it;⁸⁰ but, on the other hand, it has been held that it is not necessary that the purchaser should have known of the additional circumstances,⁸¹ and it has also been held that, although the purchaser is not guilty of fraud, gross inadequacy of price in connection with other circumstances may avoid the sale.⁸²

In some cases, the irregularities complained of may not be sufficient to warrant the setting aside of the sale even though there was inadequacy of price.⁸³ Inadequacy of price, coupled with accident or mistake, is not ground for setting aside a sale where the predicament of the party seeking relief was caused by his own negligence.⁸⁴ Mere irregularities which are cured by the delivery of the sheriff's deed are not thereafter a ground in connection with inadequacy of price;⁸⁵ and, although it is not necessary to show affirmatively that the ground relied on in connection with the inadequacy of price occasioned the inadequacy, as such natural connection may be presumed,⁸⁶ yet where the irregularity, or alleged irregularity, did not conduce to the inadequacy in price, the sale will not be set aside.⁸⁷

Particular circumstances. Gross inadequacy of price may furnish sufficient grounds for setting aside the sale where it is connected with some irregularity on the part of the officer conducting the sale;⁸⁸ a mistake,⁸⁹ including a mistake or misapprehension which prevents the parties from attending the sale whereby the property was sacrificed;⁹⁰ the sudden illness of an attorney for a party which prevented him from attending the sale and bidding;⁹¹ fraud;⁹² the absence of, or error in, the notice of sale;⁹³ inadequacy of, or errors in, description of the property to be sold;⁹⁴ a sale in gross of property which should be sold in parcels;⁹⁵ irregularity as to the time of sale;⁹⁶ a defective return;⁹⁷ the lack of a basis for, or defects in, the writ under which the sale was made;⁹⁸ irregularities in the issuance of the execution;⁹⁹ or failure to serve a copy of the execution on the judgment debtor.¹

§ 235. Advance on Bid

Some authorities are opposed to the opening of an execution sale merely because of an offer of a higher bid, although it has been held that the matter is within the court's discretion.

According to some authorities, an execution sale should not be opened merely because of an offer of a higher bid,² although it has been held that, where a sale by the sheriff is in all respects fairly and legally made, and an offer of an increased bid is made in case a resale is ordered, it is a matter of discretion with the court to which the offer is made whether to accept it.³

§ 236. Defenses by Purchaser

As a general rule, only matters which go to negative the grounds urged as invalidating the sale may be asserted in defense to setting it aside.

There is authority for the proposition that an execution purchaser in defending an action to set the sale aside has only to show the judgment of a competent court and an execution authorizing the sale.⁴ It is no bar to such action that the purchaser, being the execution plaintiff and chargeable with notice of irregularities, offered to reconvey on payment of the debt,⁵ or that there has been no offer to return the amount of the purchase money.⁶ It is no defense that the person seeking to set aside the sale has sued the officer for trespass and has recovered a judgment against him.⁷ Lack of title in plaintiff is no defense;⁸ it is no defense that complainant's right of homestead had been terminated where no right of homestead was involved;⁹ and the purchaser cannot set up an outstanding title where the holder thereof, on being made a party, disclaims any title except that of a mere naked trustee.¹⁰

Where land alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by the debtor is levied on and sold, and afterward the grantee sues to set aside the execution sale, the execution creditor may set up as a defense whatever he might have urged in a direct action to set aside the first sale as fraudulent.¹¹

§ 237. Proceedings to Open or Vacate

An execution sale may be set aside on motion in the court which issued the process or in an independent action in a court possessing equitable jurisdiction.

The procedure to set aside an execution sale is either by motion or by an independent action,¹² there being a remedy either in the court which issued the process, or, in a proper case, by a bill in equity;¹³ but whether the one remedy or the other is available in a given case is a subject of some controversy,¹⁴ as appears more fully infra §§ 238, 239. Procedure which is not authorized by the law of the particular jurisdiction may not be resorted to for the purpose of attacking an execution sale.¹⁵

It has been held that matters which were, or could have been, urged as objections to the confirmation of the sale cannot, after the sale is confirmed, be made the ground of a motion or action to set aside the sale, where the order of confirmation is not vacated and there is no charge of fraud or lack of jurisdiction.¹⁶

The right to set the sale aside may be sold and conveyed by the execution debtor.¹⁷

§ 238. — By Motion

- a. In general
- b. Time for motion
- c. Parties to motion
- d. Notice of motion

a. In General

A motion or other equivalent application in the original cause is the usual procedure followed to obtain the vacation of an execution sale.

A proceeding to set aside a sale under execution may be, and generally should be, by motion, or other equivalent application,¹⁸ unless the character of the controversy is such that it cannot, in justice to all concerned, be determined on such an informal presentation,¹⁹ or some special facts are alleged which create jurisdiction in a court of equity²⁰ and render resort to equity necessary to give additional and complete relief.²¹ However, according to some authorities, objections which might have been urged by contesting the confirmation of the sale, see supra § 237, or by a motion to quash the writ,²² cannot be urged by motion to set aside the sale.

The power of a court to vacate a sale made under its process is well settled;²³ and, except to the extent that it is otherwise provided by statute,²⁴ a motion to set aside an execution sale may and should be made in the court from which the execution is-

sued²⁵ and in the original cause.²⁶

Application and proof. In the absence of a statute or a rule of court requiring it, no formal application in writing is necessary,²⁷ nor must there be the technical precision required in more formal proceedings.²⁸ However, an affidavit setting forth the grounds for setting aside the sale, without any application or motion, is ordinarily not sufficient.²⁹

The motion or other application must state clearly and fully the grounds on which the application is made,³⁰ and it must be supported by affidavits or other proof as to matters outside the record,³¹ but fraud need not be alleged where the motion is based on other distinct grounds.³²

A failure to prove immaterial or unnecessary allegations as alleged is not fatal;³³ and it is not necessary for the moving party to offer evidence on the question of ownership.³⁴

b. Time for Motion

Generally a motion or other similar application to set aside an execution sale must be made promptly and without unreasonable delay, but there is no universal rule fixing the period of time within which the application may and must be made.

Return of execution

The fact that the execution under which the sale was made has not been returned to the court from where it was issued is no objection to the entertainment of a motion to set aside the sale.—Lee v. Davis, 16 Ala. 516.

Sale under executions from two courts

Although a statute provides that a motion to set aside an execution sale must be made in the court whence the execution issues, yet where a sale was made under an execution from a circuit court, and also an execution from the court of appeals, the circuit court has jurisdiction of a motion to set aside the sale.—Bach v. Ex parte affidavits may be used in support of the motion.—Danforth v. Burchfield, 78 So. 904, 201 Ala. 550.

Mere making of tender of payment of the original judgment and costs cannot take the place of proof to sustain the allegations of a motion attacking a sheriff's sale.—Mentzer v. Miller, 54 P.2d 1038, 176 Okl. 1.

Burden of proof

Where officer's return shows publication of notice of execution sale of realty in newspaper in county where lands are situated, burden is on attacking party to show irregularity of sale in matter of publication.—Burton v. Mee, 4 P.2d 33, 152 Okl. 220.

Proof required to overcome presumption

The presumption that the sale was made in good faith stands unless overthrown by clear and satisfactory evidence of fraud or unfair means.—Cary for Use of v. Tychonicavice, 51 York Leg.Rec., Pa., 98.

Oral testimony is competent to prove the manner and character of the levy.—Brown v. Vaughan, 42 S.W.2d 558, 184 Ark. 364.

Materiality of evidence

Evidence as to value of oil and gas rights sold under execution was immaterial on motion to set aside execution sale, where judgment debtor did not own gas rights.—Fox v. Curry, 29 P.2d 663, 96 Mont. 212.

Sufficiency of evidence

(1) Affidavit filed by plaintiff stating that defendant, against whom plaintiff recovered second judgment in action on note secured by mortgage, had quitclaimed her interest in mortgaged realty to her counsel and others did not justify order denying defendant's motion to set aside execution and sale under prior judgment on ground that defendant was no longer a party aggrieved, where quitclaim was made after plaintiff had forced sale under execution, and sale was made to defendant's own counsel, so that the circumstances themselves indicated equity in realty in defendant.—First-Trust Joint Stock Land Bank of Chicago v. Meredith, 64 P.2d 977, 19 Cal.App.2d 103.

(2) Evidence held to sustain finding as to fair market value of property.—Miners Nat. Bank of Wilkes-Barre v. Bowman, 6 A.2d 286, 334 Pa. 534.

(3) Evidence by six disinterested witnesses that mining stock had only nominal value at the time of execution sale, and that the price bid was reasonable, warranted refusal to set aside the sale on motion.—Smith v. Arizona Engineering Co., 193 P. 303, 21 Ariz. 624.

(4) Even though there is no direct evidence of an agreement to prevent competitive bidding, there may be facts from which an inference that such agreement was made can fairly be drawn.—Fenton v. Joki, 144 A. 136, 294 Pa. 309.

(5) Evidence held insufficient to support a charge of conspiracy.—Cary for Use of v. Tychonicavice, 51 York Leg.Rec., Pa., 98.

32. Iowa.—Ritter v. Henshaw, 7 Iowa 97.

33. Ala.—Danforth v. Burchfield, 78 So. 904, 201 Ala. 550.

34. Ala.—Danforth v. Burchfield, supra. 23 C.J. p 685 note 89.

Except to the extent that the time is fixed by statute,³⁵ the time within which a motion or other similar application to set aside an execution sale must be made is governed by the general rule that there must be promptness of action and no delay which is unnecessary or unreasonable, or which is not clearly and satisfactorily explained.³⁶ Tardy applications for relief are not looked on with favor,³⁷ especially where the rights of innocent persons have intervened.³⁸ However, where the sale is void, there is no limit to the time to move.³⁹

During or before return term of writ. In some states the rule obtains that the motion may and must be made during or before the return term of the writ under which the sale was made.⁴⁰

Before or after delivery of deed. In some jurisdictions the motion may be made after the sheriff's deed is delivered,⁴¹ at least if it is delivered before the return of the writ or the expiration of the return term,⁴² or where the purchaser's misconduct is the cause for setting aside the sale.⁴³ In other jurisdictions, however, a motion or other application in the original action to set aside the sale is in time when made before the sheriff's deed is delivered for the purpose of recording, even though after the acknowledge of the deed,⁴⁴ but, in the absence of fraud⁴⁵ or want of authority to make the sale,⁴⁶ is too late when made after the delivery of the deed for recording,⁴⁷ it being a rule in such jurisdictions, as stated infra § 239 a, that, after a sheriff's deed to land has been executed and delivered, the sale can be impeached, if at all, only in a court of equity, unless there was no judgment or execution, or the court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment.

Before redemption or expiration of time for redemption. According to some authorities, a motion or similar application to set aside an execution sale may⁴⁸ and must⁴⁹ be made before the time for redemption from the sale has expired. The sale cannot be vacated after a redemption therefrom has been made by the debtor.⁵⁰

Terms imposed. The view has been taken that the sale may be vacated on the motion of defendant in execution, even though he has been guilty of great laches, where such terms are imposed as to punish him for his laches and afford full indemnity to the purchaser.⁵¹

Imposing conditions generally see infra § 240.

A motion to set aside an execution sale may be made by,⁵² and only by,⁵³ a person who, according to the rules stated supra §§ 227, 228, is entitled to question the validity of the sale.

All persons who have an interest in the sale or who will be prejudiced by setting it aside should be made defendants to the motion.⁵⁴ If the creditor moves, the debtor is a necessary party.⁵⁵ The purchaser is generally a necessary party,⁵⁶ unless he has transferred all his interest,⁵⁷ in which case the assignee is a necessary party.⁵⁸ The joinder of the execution debtor with his assignee, where he has assigned his entire interest to a stranger, is not fatal.⁵⁹

d. Notice of Motion

Notice of a motion to set aside an execution sale must be given to all known interested persons unless it is waived.

The court cannot entertain a motion to set aside a sale under execution if notice is not given to all the parties interested,⁶⁰ unless such notice is waived by appearance⁶¹ or by failure to object at the proper time.⁶² Thus notice should be given to plaintiff in execution, since the vacation of the sale will deprive him of his right to the proceeds thereof;⁶³ to defendant in execution, since the vacation of the sale deprives him of the benefit of the satisfaction of the judgment entered as a result of the sale;⁶⁴

and to the purchaser at the sale, since a vacation of the sale would deprive him of the benefits of his purchase.⁶⁵ An unknown transferee or assignee of corporate stock is not entitled to notice;⁶⁶ and a party who appears and resists the motion cannot complain that notice was not given to other parties.⁶⁷

Where no particular form of notice is prescribed by statute, a notice may be timely and sufficient although it fails to fix the day of the hearing of the motion.⁶⁸

a. In General

A bill in equity to set aside an execution sale may be maintained where a proper ground for equity jurisdiction exists and the remedy at law is inadequate.

As a general rule a bill in equity to set aside an execution sale does not lie where the remedy at law by motion is adequate,⁶⁹ as where the only grounds are irregularities in the writ or in the proceedings of the officer in executing the writ.⁷⁰

A bill in equity, however, may be maintained for this purpose where proper grounds for equity jurisdiction exist,⁷¹ and where the remedy at law by motion to vacate the sale,⁷² or by ejectment or defense thereto,⁷³ is inadequate. Thus a bill in equity is the proper remedy where the questions involved are such that they cannot be as satisfactorily investigated on the hearing of the motion as on the trial of a suit in equity, as in cases where it may be necessary to excuse long delay in attacking the sale, or where there may be one who may possibly claim to be an innocent purchaser;⁷⁴ or where the purchaser has rightfully paid out considerable sums which should be refunded or secured to him if the sale is vacated;⁷⁵ or where the property has been conveyed by the purchaser at the sale to a third person;⁷⁶ or where the purchaser is not a party to the action;⁷⁷ or after the time for a motion has expired.⁷⁸

Before or after execution of deed. While, as shown supra § 238 b, there are decisions authorizing a motion to set aside the sale after the execution of a sheriff's deed; it is generally held that equity has exclusive⁷⁹ jurisdiction of a bill to set aside a sale where the sale has been followed by a deed from the sheriff, since a court of law is incompetent to decree the cancellation of such deed and thus remove the cloud it casts on the title,⁸⁰ unless there was no judgment or execution, or the court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment.⁸¹ It has been held that a suit in equity does not lie unless a sheriff's deed has been executed,⁸² although under the facts of the particular case the interposition of equity may be warranted before the deed has been delivered.⁸³

Fraud, accident, or mistake. Equity has jurisdiction of a bill to set aside a sheriff's sale in case of fraud, accident, or mistake resulting to the prejudice of complainant.⁸⁴ However, the jurisdiction of equity in this class of cases is not exclusive, but is concurrent with that of courts of law.⁸⁵

Cross complaint. The sale may be set aside on a cross complaint in a suit for the land.⁸⁶

Venue. A suit to vacate an execution sale of land is properly brought in the county wherein the purchaser resides and the land is situated.⁸⁷

b. Conditions Precedent

Ordinarily a tender of the amount necessary to reimburse the purchaser is a condition precedent to the setting aside of an execution sale.

Although there is authority to the effect that a tender of the purchase price is not necessary as a condition precedent to having the sale set aside,⁸⁸ as a general rule, since he who asks equity must do equity, a debtor seeking to set aside a sale for irregularities, where fraud is not charged, can only have such sale vacated, according to the decisions, on tendering the purchase money⁸⁹ or tendering the amount of the debt,⁹⁰ or making an offer of reimbursement for at least the amount of the judgment with interest, the amount of taxes paid with interest, and improvements.⁹¹

Where sale is set aside only as to certain interest, the owner of such interest should tender that portion of the purchase price which corresponds to his proportionate inter-

A tender of the purchase price is not necessary to a setting aside of the sale on the ground of fraud, of which the purchaser had knowledge, and where he was not misled by any act or conduct on the part of the judgment debtor, to whom the sale results in no benefit;⁹² nor is such tender necessary where the debtor notified the purchaser before the sale that the judgment had been settled,⁹³ or where the property is sold under a void judgment or execution.⁹⁴ A tender of the amount of the debt is not necessary where the holder of a security deed caused the land to be sold under execution without previously reconveying the property to the debtor by a quitclaim deed duly filed and recorded.⁹⁵

Conditions imposed by the court when granting relief are considered infra § 240.

c. Time to Sue, Limitations, and Laches

A suit in equity to set aside an execution may be barred by limitations or laches. Strong equitable grounds are necessary to warrant relief after the expiration of the period for redemption.

A suit in equity to set aside an execution sale may⁹⁶ or may not⁹⁷ be barred by limitations.

Although the suit is not barred by limitations, it may⁹⁸ or may not⁹⁹ be barred by laches. The suit must be brought within a reasonable time,¹ but it will not be barred if the delay, through lack of knowledge or otherwise, is excusable.² Where a party unnecessarily delays in seeking relief or allows the rights of third parties to intervene, the court will not grant him equitable relief after the time for his legal remedies has expired, except in the case of strong injustice as well as irregularities.³

Before or after expiration of redemption period.

Ordinarily a suit to vacate and set aside a sale under execution is timely if it is brought within the redemption period;⁴ and under some circumstances a court of equity may set aside a sale, even after the time for redemption has expired,⁵ but it will not do so except on strong equitable grounds.⁶

d. Parties

General rules as to parties ordinarily apply in a suit to set aside an execution sale.

General rules as to parties ordinarily are applicable in suits to set aside an execution sale.⁷ All persons having a legal or beneficial interest in property sold under execution, or whose interests are prejudicially affected by its sale, should be made parties to a bill to set aside the sale,⁸ as should all parties of record in the original action,⁹ and in some jurisdictions it has been held that all persons holding under such parties should likewise be made parties.¹⁰ However, where only the purchaser complains of a failure to make parties transferees from him of a portion of the land purchased, a decree vacating the sale may be valid as to him and without prejudice to the transferees.¹¹ Persons having no interest in the controversy are not necessary parties.¹²

The execution creditor has been held not to be a necessary defendant,¹³ but there is authority to the contrary.¹⁴

The execution debtor is a proper, but not a necessary, party to a proceeding to set aside the sale on the ground that the property belongs to a third person,¹⁵ or to a suit to set aside the sale and determine the rights of the various judgment creditors, where he has no right of redemption in the premises and no legal interest to be protected or foreclosed.¹⁶

The sheriff has been held not a proper defendant;¹⁷ but a contrary view has also been taken.¹⁸

e. Pleading

In a suit to set aside an execution sale the bill must state facts and circumstances disclosing an equitable cause of action.

General rules of pleading usually apply in suits to set aside an execution sale.¹⁹ The bill, petition, or complaint must state facts and circumstances disclosing an equitable cause of action.²⁰ It must show the right of plaintiff to bring the suit,²¹ state specifically the irregularity or fraud relied on as a ground for setting aside the sale,²² and show injury or prejudice therefrom.²³ Thus a bill to set aside a sale on the ground that several parcels of land were sold en masse should allege what the land sold for and its value,²⁴ and that it was susceptible of division, or that it might have been more advantageously sold in separate parcels,²⁵ or that the proceeds of the sale were less than they would have been if the land had been sold in separate parcels;²⁶ but it need not aver that the petitioner did not desire or direct that the property be sold en masse, since such direction, if given, is a matter of defense which must be pleaded by the officer or purchaser;²⁷ and the view has been taken that, where the bill complains of the sale of disconnected tracts of real estate en masse, the burden of pleading is on respondent to show that there was not an offensive use of the right of execution.²⁸ The property purchased need not be specifically described where its identity is fixed.²⁹

If there has been long delay in bringing the action, a sufficient reason therefor must be alleged in the bill.³⁰ If it is claimed that the purchaser had notice of the facts relied on, it should be so alleged;³¹ and if plaintiff claims by deed delivered before the recovery of judgment on which the execution is based it must be alleged that the deed was duly recorded or that the execution purchaser had notice before the purchase.³² Alleging that the purchaser had obtained a deed imports that he paid the amount of his bid, and does not raise an issue as to whether the purchase was for a valuable consideration.³³

The bill may be framed with a double aspect;³⁴ and the allowance of an amendment is discretionary.³⁵

Counterclaim. In an action for the recovery of the possession of real estate, a counterclaim which seeks to have the sale set aside may be sustained, although the facts alleged as grounds therefor might have been given in evidence under the general denial, which is also pleaded.³⁶

f. Evidence

General rules of evidence ordinarily apply in a suit to set aside an execution sale.

The burden of proof is on the party filing the bill to vacate an execution sale to show the irregularities or fraud relied on.³⁷ However, the burden of evidence may be shifted to defendant.³⁸ Where one who was agent for both the debtor and the creditor in effecting an execution sale himself became the purchaser at such sale, the burden is on him, in an action to set aside the sale, to show that the sale was not fraudulent.³⁹

Sale in gross

Person complaining of sale has the burden of showing that land sold on execution without subdivision was sold for an inadequate price because not offered in separate tracts.—Diets v. Hagler, 141 N.E. 194, 309 Ill. 381.

38. Tex.—Snouffer v. Heisig, Civ. App., 130 S.W. 912.

23 C.J. p 690 note 55.

Where gross inadequacy of price is coupled with circumstances indicating fraud or unfairness, purchaser can retain advantage only by showing that title was acquired by proceedings free from fraud or irregularity.—Barnes v. Freed, 173 N.E. 795, 342 Ill. 73.

39. Miss.—White v. Trotter, 22 Miss. 30, 53 Am.D. 112.

Representations by the officer, or by the purchaser before, and at the time of, the sale, are admissible in evidence in connection with the inadequacy of price, on the issue whether the sale was fair and valid.—Seller v. Lingerman, 24 Ind. 264—23 C.J. p 691 note 58.

The execution, advertisement, and appraisalment of the property are admissible in evidence for the party seeking to vacate a sale, in order to prove the material facts averred therein.—Barkley v. Mahon, 95 Ind. 101.

Evidence to impeach the return is admissible where the allegations in the petition constitute a direct attack on the return.—Moore v. Snowball, 82 S.W. 330, 36 Tex.Civ.App. 495—23 C.J. p 691 note 61.

Estoppel or waiver

For property owner to be estopped from attacking validity of execution sale, facts creating waiver or estoppel must be clearly shown and established.—Jones v. Alford, La.App., 172 So. 213.

Fraud

Where statements that the purchaser is buying for the benefit of the debtor and his family are relied on to show fraud, it is necessary to show by some evidence that persons were influenced by such statements, although slight evidence may be sufficient.—Stewart v. Severance, 43 Mo. 322, 97 Am.D. 392.

Prima facie evidence

(1) The recitals in the execution, the return thereon, and the sheriff's deed are prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein.—Massey v. Young, 73 Mo. 260.

(2) In a suit by a wife to set aside an execution sale of property, title to which was in her name, on a judgment against her husband, testimony that the land was purchased by the wife, or for her out of proceeds arising from the sale of her homestead interest in other land, and that the amount settled on her was not unreasonable in proportion to the whole consideration for the sale, makes a prima facie case for her.—Davis v. Yonge, 85 S.W. 90, 74 Ark. 161.

Undisputed or uncontradicted evidence

(1) Sheriff's uncontradicted testimony that he posted notices of execution sale shows that they were posted.—Runyon v. Bevins, 291 S.W. 1033, 218 Ky. 589.

(2) Undisputed evidence that full purchase price of realty sold on execution was paid within fifteen minutes time consumed by sheriff and purchaser in walking two blocks from place of sale to bank where purchaser had his money sustains trial justice's finding that sale was for cash.—Coulters v. Meiggs, 191 A. 115, 58 R.I. 30.

Evidence held sufficient

(1) To justify judgment nullifying sale on ground that writ of fieri facias was not issued.—Jones v. Alford, La.App., 172 So. 213.

(2) To render judgment upholding sale proper as against claim of inadequacy in price.—Ruter v. Slatery, 237 N.W. 232, 212 Iowa 677.

sale are usually governed by rules obtaining in civil actions generally.

§ 240. — Hearing, Determination, and Judgment

An application for relief against an execution sale is addressed largely to the discretion of the court.

An application for relief against an execution sale, whether it is presented to a court of equity or to the court out of which the execution issued, is to a large extent addressed to the discretion of the court, and in each case the court has considerable latitude in determining whether or not a proper case is made for the exercise of its jurisdiction.⁴² Unless the right to have evidence taken and witnesses examined is given by statute, and has not been waived,⁴³ on a motion to set aside an execution sale the court may exercise its discretion in allowing or disallowing evidence to be introduced,⁴⁴ and may go beyond the face of the papers and examine questions outside of those affecting the mere regularity of the proceedings;⁴⁵ but the court's exercise of its discretion is not uncontrollable, and where there has been an abuse of discretion a reversal may be obtained on appeal.⁴⁶ After reversal, it may be necessary, under the mandate and in order to carry out the intention of the appellate court, that the motion be fully heard and all competent evidence thereon be received.⁴⁷

The granting of an order nisi to set aside an execution sale operates, as soon as the parties have notice of it, to stay any further action pending a hearing on the motion.⁴⁸ There is neither necessity nor justification for the appointment of a receiver where the motion affords all parties a plenary hearing and no facts showing immediate peril to the rights of the parties are pleaded.⁴⁹

Material issues must be determined⁵⁰ and the judgment must correspond to the issues.⁵¹ Plaintiff cannot obtain a decree on other grounds disclosed by the proof, without amendment, where the evidence disproves the case made by the bill.⁵² Where plaintiff has homestead rights but sues to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud, it is proper to set aside the sale instead of merely setting off the homestead in the land.⁵³ The rights of a person who is not a party cannot properly be adjudicated.⁵⁴ Equity will not grant relief merely because of a technicality,⁵⁵ nor where to do so would work injustice;⁵⁶ and where the purchaser is the judgment creditor, it may be proper, in order to do equity, to allow the sale to stand and declare that defendant holds the property in trust to sell and apply the proceeds in reduction or payment of the amount due on his judgment, rendering any surplus to complainant.⁵⁷ Where the denial of relief to plaintiff in a suit to set aside the sale renders unnecessary affirmative equitable relief prayed for by defendant in a cross bill, relief on the cross bill should not be granted.⁵⁸

Jury trial and instructions. It has been held that a jury trial may be demanded.⁵⁹ Where there is a jury trial, all questions of fact, such as the question of fraud, are for the jury, under appropriate instructions from the court.⁶⁰

Nonsuit. A nonsuit is improper where there is evidence to support plaintiff's case.⁶¹

Imposing conditions. The setting aside of the sale may be conditioned on making certain payments, giving security, or doing other appropriate acts.⁶² Reimbursement of sums paid out by the purchaser to protect the property⁶³ and of the amount of the bid which he has paid,⁶⁴ less the rents and profits chargeable against him,⁶⁵ is generally required. However, repayment of the bid or so much as paid by the purchaser need not be ordered where the purchaser is one with notice.⁶⁶ Payment of the debt,⁶⁷ or of the judgment, interest, and costs,⁶⁸ is sometimes made a condition precedent where the attacking party is the execution debtor or his grantee.

Effect of decision. The court's decision on a motion is not conclusive of the ultimate rights of the parties claiming the property;⁶⁹ and the denial of a motion made by a stranger to the action does not deprive the court of jurisdiction of a similar motion subsequently presented by defendant.⁷⁰

Costs and security therefor. The purchaser at an execution sale is not chargeable with the costs of an equitable suit to set aside the sale brought by the judgment debtor without a tender of the amount of the judgment.⁷¹ Security for costs need not be given before consideration of a rule nisi to set aside a sheriff's sale where the ground for setting aside is not inadequacy of price.⁷²

§ 241. Effect of Setting Aside Sale

On the setting aside of an execution sale, the parties are, or should be, restored, as far as possible, to the positions they occupied before the sale.

On setting aside an execution sale, all parties are or should be placed in statu quo as far as possible.⁷³ Thus, where the sale is vacated for an irregularity or fraud in the conduct thereof, as a general rule the judgment creditor should be restored to his full judgment rights,⁷⁴ the purchaser should be refunded the purchase money,⁷⁵ and the execution debtor restored to his title and to possession of the property,⁷⁶ or its proceeds,⁷⁷ although he cannot have both the property and its proceeds or an application of the proceeds to the payment of the debt.⁷⁸ After the sale has been set aside, the purchaser has no title to the property⁷⁹ and cannot convey any title.⁸⁰

Where an execution sale is objected to on two grounds, a general order setting it aside, although res judicata as to the validity of the sale, is not res judicata as to either of the grounds urged.⁸¹ An action on a claim is not barred by the fact that an execution sale was had under a former judgment which was reversed, where the sale was set aside before it became absolute.⁸²

Effect on levy. While it has been held that the levy on which the sale was made is not restored,⁸³ it has also been held otherwise under statute,⁸⁴ or where the sale is set aside on grounds pertaining to steps taken subsequent to, and not involving the validity of, the seizure.⁸⁵

Resale. In some cases a resale may be ordered under the original writ to make the debt and costs, inclusive of the costs of the prior sale;⁸⁶ and where a resale is ordered and the sale unconditionally set aside, on the purchaser failing to comply with his bid, he thereafter has no interest in the proceedings.⁸⁷

§ 242. Collateral Attack on Sale

An execution sale may be collaterally attacked only when the sale is void.

If the defect or irregularity relied on makes the execution sale void rather than voidable, it may be urged by way of collateral attack,⁸⁸ as in ejectment⁸⁹ or in some other action to recover possession or establish title;⁹⁰ but it has been held that in order to be received with favor the collateral attack should come from some creditor or purchaser claiming an intervening right or lien.⁹¹

On the other hand, if the defect or irregularity relied on,⁹² whether occurring before the sale,⁹³ or in the conduct of the sale,⁹⁴ makes the sale merely voidable and not void, it cannot be urged by way of a collateral attack, but only on a motion to set it aside or in a direct action instituted for that purpose; and this is particularly true after the sale has been confirmed.⁹⁵ For instance, the want of proper notice of sale is not ground for a collateral attack on the sale,⁹⁶ especially after confirmation and a finding that due notice of the sale was given.⁹⁷ It cannot be urged collaterally that the sale was en masse instead of in parcels,⁹⁸ or that the price for which the property was sold was inadequate.⁹⁹

Collateral attack on judgment. Where the judgment on which the execution issued is erroneous, or irregularities were committed in the action in which such judgment was recovered, the remedy is by appeal or writ of error, and if the party foregoes these methods of correcting errors and irregularities in the judgment, he cannot afterward set them up in a collateral action or proceeding involving the title to the property sold;¹ but the judgment may be attacked collaterally where it is void,² as where it was rendered by a court which had no jurisdiction.³

motion or other proceeding to set aside an execution sale is a direct, and not a collateral, attack.⁴ Where an action is brought on the sheriff's deed,⁵ such as ejectment,⁶ or where an action of trespass to try title is brought,⁷ and defendant seeks by appropriate pleadings to set aside the sale, the attack is a direct and not a collateral one, although it is otherwise, as to an attack by defendant in an action of trespass to try title, where he does not make the judgment creditor a party and does not tender to the purchaser the price he paid at the sale.⁸ On the other hand, in an action of trespass to try title against the holder of a sheriff's deed, an attack by plaintiff on the sale or proceedings relating thereto is collateral rather than direct;⁹ but evidence which merely explains the date of the delivery of the deed is not a collateral attack.¹⁰

C. PROCEEDS

§ 243. Definition

The "proceeds" of an execution sale may be defined as all that which is received therefrom.

"Proceeds" means all that is received from an execution sale.¹¹

§ 244. Disposition in General

Generally the plaintiff of record or his assignee is the person legally entitled to the proceeds of an execution sale and, in the absence of superior claims or contrary provisions of statute, payment may be made directly to him, although technically it is more proper that the money should be paid into the court from which the execution issued.

Except in so far as there are preferred claims as of the time of sale payable therefrom,¹² the general rule is that plaintiff of record, or his assignee, is the party legally entitled to the proceeds of an execution sale, and the sheriff should pay over to such party the money so collected, less the amount of his fees and charges, so far as required to satisfy the execution,¹³ but where an order of court authorizes the proceeds to be paid over to the creditor only on his complying with certain conditions which he fails to do, the debtor is entitled to the proceeds.¹⁴ The sheriff has no right to appropriate the proceeds to other claims or purposes leaving plaintiff's debt unsatisfied.¹⁵ It is usual for the officer to pay the money directly to plaintiff in execution, but in strictness he should bring it into the court issuing the execution, since such is the command of the writ.¹⁶ Where the sheriff is directed by defendant not to pay out, he may either retain the money until he is sued, or apply for leave to pay it into court.¹⁷

Statutory provisions. Of course, in the distribution of proceeds arising from a sheriff's sale, it is necessary to have regard to whatever statutes there may be which fix the priorities of creditors and prescribe how distributions shall be made.¹⁸

In case of wrongful sale. Where the execution debtor stands passively by and allows his property to be sold, and makes no opposition to the sale, and subsequently surrenders possession, he cannot claim the proceeds of the sale on the ground that the judgment had been satisfied by payment prior to the sale,¹⁹ or on the ground that the consideration of the debt, to pay which the property was sold, was illegal,²⁰ or on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings.²¹ However, where there is proper ground for setting a sale aside on account of irregularities in the proceedings, but the property has passed into the hands of innocent purchasers, then the execution debtor can have recourse to the proceeds of the sale in lieu of the recovery of the property.²² A grantee who claims the land under a conveyance from defendant in the execution prior to the judgments against him is not entitled to the proceeds of sale in preference to the judgment creditors, since if his title is valid it may be set up against the claim of the purchaser at the sheriff's sale.²³ Where property of a third person is sold as that of the debtor, the right of the former to the proceeds of the sale is the same as his previous right to the property.²⁴

Who may make objections. A person having no claim to the proceeds cannot object to an order for payment to certain other persons.²⁵

Agreements. Where lien creditors enter into an agreement for the distribution of the proceeds of an execution sale in a certain manner, such agreement will bind the parties thereto, and the distribution by the sheriff in accordance therewith will be upheld.²⁶

Costs, expenses, and attorney's fees. The sheriff has a lien on the funds in his hand realized from an execution sale for his lawful fees, and the expense incurred in making the levy and sale, and he may retain such amount on settlement with the execution creditor;²⁷ and where such creditor is insolvent the court may order the costs to be paid out of money in the sheriff's hands due to such creditor.²⁸ However, unless there is a statutory provision to the contrary,²⁹ where liens on the property

Proceedings for distribution see infra § 252.

Prior to expiration of time for redemption

Where stranger to suit became the purchaser at an execution sale of realty, the sheriff should have delivered the purchase money to the execution creditor when it was received, and could not wait until the time for redemption of the judgment debtor should expire.—*Fort Smith Seed Co. v. having priority to the judgment and execution under which the land was sold exhaust the fund realized by the sale, the costs of the execution and sale thereunder should be deducted before distribution of the fund to the prior lienors,³⁰ not including costs incurred prior to the issuance of the execution.³¹ The fees on one execution cannot be retained out of the surplus proceeds arising from another execution.³² Where the proceeds are less than the amount which, by statute, the debtor is entitled to as exempt, he is entitled to the entire fund without any deduction of costs.³³ Where the amount levied is insufficient to discharge plaintiff's judgment, the costs of defendant's witnesses cannot be paid out of the amount levied.³⁴

Attorneys fees or commissions cannot be paid out of the proceeds of sale,³⁵ unless they constitute a prior lien on the property,³⁶ or unless such fees are expressly included in the judgment.³⁷

§ 245. Duty and Right of Purchaser as to Application

Generally the purchaser at an execution sale has no duty or right regarding the officer's application of the proceeds.

The purchaser at the execution sale is under no duty to see that the officer makes a proper application of the purchase money;³⁸ nor can he demand that the money paid by him be applied in a particular manner.³⁹

§ 246. Mortgages and Other Liens

Where a lien still attaches to the property notwithstanding its sale on execution, it is not payable from the proceeds of the sale; but liens of which property is freed by the sale are ordinarily transferred to the proceeds and are payable therefrom in the order of their priority as of the time of sale.

Liens, which are not discharged by the execution sale, but continue as liens on the property, are not payable out of the proceeds of the sale.⁴⁰ Thus, where there is a valid recorded mortgage on property at the time of the rendition of the judgment, only the equity of redemption is subject to levy and sale, and therefore the judgment creditor is entitled to the proceeds of sale, and not the mortgagee, whose lien still attaches to the property,⁴¹ and this rule applies even where the mortgagee is the purchaser.⁴² This rule likewise applies to vendors'⁴³ and mechanics'⁴⁴ liens. If land is only partially paid for by the judgment debtor, who has possession but no deed, the proceeds go to the judgment creditor rather than the vendor.⁴⁵ If the proceeds have been attached as the property of the judgment creditor, the lien comes into existence when the proceeds come into the hands of the officer.⁴⁶

Where sale is free from liens. Where, by statute or otherwise, the sale on execution is free from preëxisting liens, such liens are ordinarily transferred from the property to the proceeds of the sale.⁴⁷ In such case the proceeds should be ap-

Claim to property sold

When claimants to property levied on did not file a bond, the property was therefore sold, and the claim proceeding was determined in their favor, the sheriff could deduct the legal costs incident to the entry of judgment, the sheriff's levy, and the costs of sale from the proceeds of sale payable to claimants.—Lancaster Bone Fertilizer Co. v. Consent presumed

plied to the liens according to their priority,⁴⁸ as determined at the time of the sale, since an after-acquired lien cannot attach to such proceeds.⁴⁹ Only judgment or lien creditors of defendant in execution are within the rule, and it has no application to his contract creditors.⁵⁰ Where a sale takes place under a judgment and execution having priority over a mortgage, the proceeds go first to the satisfaction of such execution.⁵¹ If the holder of a lien becomes the purchaser at a low price on announcing at the sale that it would be subject to his lien, his lien is not entitled to participate in the distribution of the proceeds.⁵²

§ 247. Preferred Claims

- a. In general
- b. Wages
- c. Rent
- d. Debts due government

a. In General

An equitable preference may arise from the fact that the particular creditor has discovered property of the judgment debtor and brought it into court. Other preferences may arise from statutes.

A creditor who has instituted supplementary proceedings, discovered property of the judgment debtor, and brought it into court, may be given an equitable preference to the proceeds of an execution sale of the property.⁵³

As considered infra this section, statutes in some states give preferences to certain claims against the debtor, such as laborer's claims, rent claims, and debts due the government. Such statutes have no extraterritorial force.⁵⁴

Where priority is given by statute to wage claims in certain instances, the statutory proceeding for effectuating such priority must be followed.

In some jurisdictions, by statute, money due for wages to certain persons in certain specified businesses, for a designated period preceding an execution sale of property connected with such business, is made a preferred claim, and is first to be paid out of the proceeds of such sale,⁵⁵ if, when the statute so prescribes, the judgment debtor is insolvent.⁵⁶ A person is not entitled to a preference in the distribution of the proceeds, unless he is one of a class of persons specifically designated by the statute,⁵⁷ and the services were rendered during tire interest was levied on, sold, and conveyed, mortgagor was insolvent, and mortgagee, in obtaining his judgment under which property was sold, had set up and established a preferred lien on property mortgaged, and awarding funds to holder of superior mortgage lien under money rule was not error.—Coweta Fertilizer Co. v. M. C. Kiser Co., 125 S.E. 793, 33 Ga.App. 278.

Effect of prothonotary's certificate

On execution and sale of realty, the fact that certificate of prothonotary showed that lien creditor which purchased at the sale held the first lien and omitted a lien in favor of exceptor, which was imposed by an equity decree which was binding on the lien creditor, because it was a party, did not entitle sheriff to distribute proceeds of the sale without regard to the exceptor's lien, since a proper case for correction of the record was presented.—Duquesne Trust Co. v. Benovitz, 2 A.2d 756, 332 Pa. 243.

Partly satisfied mortgage

Purchaser's payments on mortgage extinguished mortgage in amount thereof, and therefore distribution of full amount of mortgage to such purchaser after execution sale was improper.—Marshall v. Klein, 96 Pa. Super. 560.

Clergyman has no priority of lien for wages out of proceeds of church property sold under execution issued at instance of judgment creditor of church.—Bogdan v. St. Michael's Russian Orthodox Church, supra.

Employees of contractor

Where a statute provides that those employed by a contractor in any work on an oil well shall be entitled to a lien for their services, it was held that the word "contractor" meant only persons employed by the owner or lessees of the well, and did not embrace those who undertake to perform some special service in the construction of the well or opening of the same.—Gibbs & Sterrett Mfg. Co's, Appeal, 100 Pa. 528.

Laborer

One who performs a contract to deliver lumber, by hiring teams and drivers, but who does no hauling himself, is not a "laborer" within the meaning of the statute, and is not entitled to the preference provided by statute in distributing the

the time limited by the statute.⁵⁸ The preference is due only from proceeds of property which has been used in and about, or in connection with, the business in the course of which the services were rendered, and such other property as may be sold with it.⁵⁹ The claim can only be allowed to the one performing the work,⁶⁰ or his assignee.⁶¹ Although it has been held that the preference does not apply to wages earned after a particular property has been seized by the sheriff on execution, since property so levied on is in the custody of the law, and that when sold the proceeds are preserved against creditors whose liens attach subsequent to the levy,⁶² the day of sale must be regarded as the true limit from which to reckon the preference for wages of labor in all cases where the possession of the owner is not disturbed or transferred to the sheriff.⁶³ Such claims are not a lien on the property, but only on its proceeds in the custody of the law, and hence until there has been a conversion of the property into money the rights of a labor claimant do not vest;⁶⁴ and he has no control of a writ of execution issued by a judgment creditor against the employer.⁶⁵ The rights of claimant are not affected by the fact that his claim has been reduced to judgment.⁶⁶

Notice of claim. In order to have a claim for wages accruing against a judgment debtor allowed, it is necessary for claimant to file with the sheriff a written notice of his claim prior to the execution sale;⁶⁷ and under some statutes it is also necessary that notice of the claim be given to the judgment creditor,⁶⁸ and to the judgment debtor,⁶⁹ unless such notice is waived.⁷⁰ While such notice need not be in any particular form so long as the matters essential to give claimant a lien are recited, yet it should set forth facts sufficient to make a case within the statute, so that the officer and persons interested may know that the labor was performed within the time limited in a business defined by the act, the sum due, and that property, the proceeds of which is subject to the lien, is embraced in the levy.⁷¹ A failure to file or give the notice required constitutes a waiver of the right to a preference in the distribution of the proceeds.⁷² Any number of claims may be included in one notice, especially those of husband and wife, provided all the requirements of the statute, relative to each, are complied with.⁷³ It is not necessary that the notice should recite all the executions under and by virtue of which the levy was made; it is sufficient if the first execution is recited.⁷⁴

Claims for rent, to be entitled to preference in a distribution of the proceeds of an execution sale, must be perfected as required by the statute conferring the preference, and must be within its provisions.

Under some statutes, where the personal property of a lessee or tenant, which would be liable to distress, is sold on execution, the lessor or landlord is entitled to a preference in the distribution of the proceeds for rent of the premises on which such property is situated,⁷⁵ even though sufficient person-proceeds of an execution sale.—Wentroth's Appeal, 82 Pa. 469.

The purpose of such a statute is to benefit landlords, not execution creditors, although the view is not without support that it tends to promote the interests of both tenants and their creditors by removing the inducement to landlords to require onerous conditions for their security.—Petition of Hoopes, 5 A. 2d 655, 1 Terry, Del., 126, sustaining 5 A. 2d 653, 1 Terry 120.

Distrain is not necessary prior to the levy in order that a landlord's claim be entitled to priority.—In re Goldstein, D.C. Pa., 34 F. Supp. 876.

The preference is coextensive with the right of distress and only the sum due for rent which can be col-

al property is left on the premises, after the sale, to satisfy the rent,⁷⁶ unless he has waived or otherwise lost his right to such preference,⁷⁷ or unless the sale does not discharge his lien, as in the case of a sale of property under a judgment obtained after a transfer by the judgment debtor which was fraudulent as to creditors.⁷⁸ Such a preference has been held to extend to the usual conveyance in fee on ground rent, with right of reënt, so that the landlord is entitled to be paid the arrears out of the proceeds of an execution sale, although without interest.⁷⁹

Time and basis of accrual of rent. Under some statutes the lessor or landlord is entitled to a preference only for the rent which has accrued or is due at the time of the levy of the execution and not for rent to the date of sale, or for the time after levy during which the goods remain on the premises in the possession of the officer.⁸⁰ Rent payable in advance, if due, may be claimed out of the proceeds of sale.⁸¹ Under other statutes the preference extends to subsequent rent, such as rent growing due but not accrued at the time of seizure,⁸² rent accrued up to the day of removal of the goods,⁸³ or rent due up to the time of sale.⁸⁴

Under the statutes the landlord is usually limited as to the time, such as one year, for which he may claim rent.⁸⁵ In a case of rent accrued at the time of seizure if the prescribed length of time is not exceeded, it is immaterial that the rent claimed is not all for the current year, the last year, or the year immediately preceding the levy.⁸⁶ Likewise rent may be preferred although it has accrued under successive leases.⁸⁷ In a case of rent growing due lected by distress can be demanded under the preference.—In re Myers, D.C.Pa., 102 F. 869—36 C.J. p 565 note 97.

Failure of the sheriff to apply the proceeds on a landlord's claim for rent does not invalidate the sale or cause the purchaser's title to be encumbered by the landlord's lien.—Craddock v. Riddlesbarger, 2 Dana, Ky., 205.

Renting on shares

The preference has been extended to the value of shares of crops payable as rent.—Zug v. Watson, 19 Pa. Dist. & Co. 571, 47 York Leg.Rec. 174.

After termination of tenancy

The preference exists only where the tenancy was in existence at the time of the seizure under execution and the landlord cannot claim it where the goods were seized after the termination of the tenancy by agreement of the parties, although rent was still unpaid.—In re Ellegood, 116 A. 127, 1 W.W.Harr., Del., 529.

The unexpired term of the lease is not goods and chattels on the leased premises within the meaning of a statute granting a preference from the proceeds of a sale of such goods and chattels.—Schwartzman v. Gould, 160 A. 207, 5 W.W.Harr., Del., 150.

Levies under several executions

Where levies are made under a number of executions, and the proceeds of the sale are not sufficient to satisfy all of them, the landlord's claim for rent due is to be reckoned up to the date of the levy made on that execution which is the last to participate in the fund.—Wadas v. Sharp, 27 Pa.Super. 233—Worley v. Meekley, 1 Phila., Pa., 398—23 C.J. p 701 note 98 [a]—36 C.J. p 566 note 2.

Acceleration clauses

(1) A provision in a lease that if the goods on the premises shall be sold under execution against the lessee the rent for the balance of the then term shall become due as though by the terms of the lease it were payable in advance and shall first be paid out of the proceeds of such sale is binding on the execution creditor.—Weiss v. Levey, 69 Pa.Super. 359.

(2) A provision in a lease that if default is made in any of its conditions, if execution is issued against the lessee or if an assignment is made for the benefit of creditors, the rent for the entire balance of the term shall at once become due and payable will be sustained to the extent of giving the landlord priority for one year's rent out of the proceeds from an execution sale.—Rosenblum v. Uber, Pa., 256 F. 584, 167 C.C.A. 614—36 C.J. p 507 notes 20, 22.

Landlord as purchaser

Landlord buying in tenant's unexpired lease at sheriff's sale of tenant's chattels, and immediately taking possession, is entitled to priority for year's rent growing due.—Schwartzman v. Gould, 160 A. 207, 5 W.W.Harr., Del., 150.

Date of seizure material

but not accrued at the time of seizure, a preference for one year's rent is not limited to the year immediately following the seizure.⁸⁸

Notice of claim. In order to avail himself of this preference, it is ordinarily necessary for the lessor or landlord to give notice to the officer of his claim prior to the sale of the property levied on,⁸⁹ even though the statute does not, in words, require notice.⁹⁰ Under some statutes actual knowledge on the part of the officer does not supply the place of notice,⁹¹ while under other statutes a contrary rule prevails.⁹²

Under the statutes the time for giving notice is variously limited, as, for example, to the time preceding the distribution of the proceeds of the execution sale⁹³ or to the time preceding removal of the goods.⁹⁴ Under a statute requiring notice prior to the sale it has been held that the landlord must strictly pursue the statute or he cannot acquire rights under it.⁹⁵

be in writing, and it is sufficient if the sheriff is in any way apprised of the claim and of the amount due.⁹⁶ Under some statutes the notice is in the nature of legal process and the landlord should state the facts required by the statutes to show that he is entitled to a preference.⁹⁷ Thus the notice must be from the landlord⁹⁸ or his agent,⁹⁹ and must show that the claimant was landlord,¹ that defendant in execution was his tenant and that the money is due from him as such² for the rent of the demised premises.³ Where the preference is restricted to rent payable before the levy, the notice of claim must show that the claim is within the restriction.⁴ Where the statute so requires, the notice should be accompanied by an affidavit showing the amount of rent claimed to be due,⁵ although in the absence of a statute so requiring the landlord is not required to state the amount due with absolute precision.⁶

d. Debts Due Government

Statutory priority is frequently awarded to debts due to the national government, the states, or municipalities.

Lease not commenced

Liberal construction

Under statute providing that tenant's goods located on leased premises and seized on execution process are liable in preference to process for one year's rent "growing due at the time of said seizure," the quoted words must be construed liberally in favor of landlord.—Petition of Hoopes, 5 A.2d 653, 1 Terry, Del., 120, sustained 5 A.2d 655, 1 Terry 126.

In the absence of statute, debts due to the national government, a state, or a municipality, such as debts for taxes, are not entitled to priority over subsisting liens on the property sold on execution in the distribution of the proceeds realized therefrom.⁷ However, in some jurisdictions, by express statutory enactment, such debts are made a first lien on the property and have a preference over all other claims in the distribution of the proceeds of the sale.⁸ Statutory provisions for recording tax liens must be conformed to in order that a preference be obtained.⁹ Where an undivided interest in land has been sold only a proportionate share of taxes against the land need be paid from the proceeds of the sale in preference to the execution.¹⁰

§ 248. Distribution among Different Judgments or Executions

In general the right of a judgment or execution creditor to share in the proceeds of a sale on execution on another judgment depends on whether or not the lien of his judgment or execution on the property itself has been destroyed. As between different judgments and executions entitled to share in the proceeds in general they should take in accordance with the priorities of their liens, and in the absence of statute to the contrary where liens are equal they should share pro rata.

The proceeds of an execution sale are not applicable to the satisfaction of judgments which were not liens on the property and under which no execution was levied thereon.¹¹

The right of judgment and execution lienors to share in the proceeds of sale depends on whether or not the sale extinguishes their liens on the property.¹² The general rule in the case of a sale of land under a junior execution is that the title passes subject to the lien of a prior judgment or execution, and the money realized from such sale cannot be applied to the payment of a senior judgment lien;¹³

Shirk, 12 Pa.Dist. & Co. 322, 41 Lanc.L.Rev. 385.

In New Jersey

(1) Under statute an execution sale under a junior judgment discovers the lien of a prior judgment when there has been no execution and levy under the latter.—Lambertville Nat. Bank v. Boss, Ch., 13 A. 18.

(2) Under earlier decisions the proceeds of sale under a junior execution were not applied to the prior lien because the latter continued to be enforceable against the land.—

Den v. Young, 13 N.J.Law 300—Williamson v. Johnston, 12 N.J.Law 86.

In North Carolina

(1) The rule has been applied with the qualification that if executions on senior judgments are in the sheriff's hands at the time of sale under an execution on a junior judgment, the lien of those senior judgments is transferred to the proceeds of sale.—Bernhardt v. Brown, 24 S.E. 527, 118 N.C. 700—Burton v. Spiers, 92 N. C. 503—23 C.J. p 702 note 12.

(2) In a case involving such qualification the sheriff should apply the proceeds to the execution in his hands which was issued on the oldest docketed judgment and the proceeds should next be applied in satisfaction of the next oldest judgment lien, whether execution has issued thereon or not.—G. A. Gambrell Mfg. Co. v. Wilcox, 15 S.E. 885, 111 N.C. 42, 44.

(3) As another qualification, if the amount bid by holder of second judgment at execution sale under the second judgment was more than the amount of that judgment, the judgment debtors were entitled to have the excess over and above the amount necessary to pay the second judgment applied to the satisfaction of first judgment.—Abernethy Land & Finance Co. v. First Security Trust Co., 196 S.E. 340, 213 N.C. 369.

(4) It is legal duty of trust company, purchasing judgment prior to judgments secured by it as administrator of decedent's estate against same parties, to apply proceeds of sale of lands under execution on latter judgments to satisfaction of prior judgment so far as adequate and available for such purpose, whether in pursuance of purchase contract

but it has been held that, whether the sale is had under the junior or any other of the executions in the sheriff's hands, the proceeds must be applied to the satisfaction of the existing judgment liens.¹⁴ When a sale of real property is made under a prior execution, the junior judgment and execution liens on the land are ordinarily extinguished and therefore the lienholders may share in the proceeds.¹⁵ Where the sale is made under all the executions and judgments, or under a junior judgment but free and clear from all judgment liens, the latter liens may share in the proceeds.¹⁶

So far as personal property is concerned, however, it is generally held that the proceeds of its sale, under an execution, must be applied to the satisfaction of other executions, even though the latter

were prior liens on the property, because the sale discharges the liens;¹⁷ but in some jurisdictions the proceeds of such a sale should be applied to the junior execution, under which the sale was made, where there has been no levy under the senior execution.¹⁸

Priorities. When different judgments or executions are entitled to participate in the proceeds of a sheriff's sale, distribution as between them should generally be according to the priorities of their liens,¹⁹ especially where there is an agreement between the parties to this effect.²⁰ This rule of distribution has been applied where priorities among execution liens depend on the order of delivery of the writs to the officer,²¹ although the several executions are levied at the same time,²² or although, or not.—Abernethy Land & Finance Co. v. First Security Trust Co., 199 S.E. 733, 214 N.C. 478.

Lack of authority to sell

An officer who attempts to sell real estate under two executions and who has authority to sell under the junior execution, but not under the senior one, must apply the proceeds of the sale to the junior execution and not to the senior one.—Mushback v. Ryerson, 11 N.J.Law 346.

17. Ala.—Caldwell v. Houser, 19 So. 796, 108 Ala. 125.

In Mississippi

(1) The text rule of distribution is especially applicable where the sale is made in violation of an agreement between the parties.—Kohlman v. Meridian First Nat. Bank, 15 So. 131, 71 Miss. 843.

(2) Under statutes making judgments liens on personal property without the issuance of execution, the holders of prior judgment liens who comply with statutory requirements may be paid from the proceeds of a sale under a junior execution.—Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Trotter, 36 Miss. 416.

(3) However, under earlier statutes it was held that if there was a prior judgment lien on personal property sold under a junior execution the proceeds of the sale belonged to the junior lienor and the prior lienor could not share therein but was left to recourse against the property.—Reynolds v. Ingersoll, 19

Miss. 249, 49 Am.D. 57—Goode v. Mayson, 7 Miss. 543.

(4) When the operative energy of a prior execution had been suspended by an injunction, a sale under a junior execution did not discharge the prior lien and it was not payable from the proceeds.—Lynn v. Gridley, 1 Miss. 548, 12 Am.D. 591.

Deposit of lien with sheriff

Where two executions are held by different parties, and property is sold under the junior execution, the sheriff may pay the proceeds to the plaintiff by whose process it was raised, unless the holder of the senior execution deposits his lien with the sheriff, and, where the senior lienholder fails to do so, he cannot recover the fund from the junior lienholder.—McDuffie Oil & Fertilizer Co. v. Sims, 120 S.E. 549, 31 Ga. App. 261, transferred, see 117 S.E. 318, 155 Ga. 521.

Execution suspended

If a prior judgment creditor suspends his execution he loses his priority of lien so that an execution sale under a junior judgment will accrue to its benefit.—Michie v.

Planters' Bank, 5 Miss. 130, 34 Am.D. 112.

Other property of debtor

(1) Where execution creditor failed to prove judgment debtor had other property to satisfy claim of intervening prior judgment creditor, latter was entitled to priority in proceeds of execution sale.—Penn Liberty Oil Co. v. Crescent Magnolia Planting & Mfg. Co., 132 So. 254, 15 La.App. 670.

(2) On exceptions to distribution of proceeds of the sale of realty, it appeared that a holder of a judgment had issued execution and levied on the personal property of the debtor, which was claimed by a third person, and that it had secured a verdict on the sheriff's interpleader. Subsequently it compromised the verdict for a lesser amount. On the levy on the real estate and the distribution of the proceeds thereof it was error to disregard the senior lien. The holder thereof by its diligence acquired a levy on the debtor's personal property and reduced the lien by the amount recovered; but it was not to be penalized for making a compromise, and was under no duty to consult the junior creditor before so doing, and at the time of the sale of the real estate there were not two funds to which the senior creditor had recourse, the personal fund having been eliminated nearly a year before.—*Zacharias v. where the several executions are in the hands of the same officer, the junior execution is levied first;²³ and has also been held to apply although no levy is made on the senior execution.²⁴ Under this rule the proceeds of a sale should be applied to a judgment having priority of lien before application to a junior judgment even though execution on the latter was first levied.²⁵ At common-law where the proceeds of a sale of property under two or more executions, the liens of which are equal, are not sufficient to pay the debts that have been levied, the proceeds must be applied equally to the several debts, irrespective of their several amounts, unless a surplus remains after the full payment of one or more of the claims, in which case the surplus must be applied equally to the balance of the unpaid debts.²⁶

Exceptions to the general rule of distribution according to the priority of liens occur where the prior lienor waives his rights, as considered infra § 249, and under particular statutory provisions which are intended to aid a diligent junior lienor.²⁷ Also in many jurisdictions, by statutory enactment, where several judgments are rendered at the same term of court against one defendant in favor of different creditors, and real estate of the judgment debtor is sold under an execution issued on one of the judgments, executions on the other judgments being all in the sheriff's hands at the time of sale, the holders of such judgments are entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of the sale, without regard to the execution under which the land was sold.²⁸ Such a statute ordinarily relates only to sales of real estate, and not to sales of personal property on which executions become liens in the order of priority of delivery to the sheriff.²⁹

rules are not changed by the fact that some of the judgments were rendered in state courts and some of them were rendered in federal courts;³⁰ but the marshal cannot apply proceeds to the satisfaction of a judgment in the state courts, in the hands of the sheriff.³¹

Where one judgment or execution fraudulent or satisfied. Where property is sold under several executions, one of the creditors is not entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale if it appears that his judgment or execution is fraudulent,³² or has previously been satisfied,³³ unless such satisfaction has been vacated.³⁴ A judgment lien which has been partly satisfied can share in the proceeds of a sale only on the basis of the remainder of the claim, not on the basis of the entire original amount.³⁵ Where a first judgment is held valid as against a second judgment, but invalid as against a third judgment, the first judgment creditor is nevertheless entitled to so much of the proceeds of a sale as between the second and third judgment creditors would have gone to the second.³⁶

Set-off against execution creditor. Money collected by an officer on an execution sale is in custodia legis, and in some jurisdictions it cannot be applied by the officer to the satisfaction of a contemporaneous execution against the execution creditor, at least not before the return of the first execution.³⁷ In other jurisdictions, however, the sheriff may apply the proceeds of an execution sale to the payment of an execution held by him against the execution creditor,³⁸ or on motion the court may order him to do so,³⁹ unless the legal or equitable right to it has passed to some other person.⁴⁰

The rights of a prior creditor to the proceeds may be waived by him.⁴¹ Where an execution creditor having a prior lien allows the proceeds of a sale to be applied in satisfaction of a junior lien to the prejudice of third persons, it will be considered an extinguishment pro tanto of such creditor's lien,⁴² and it is immaterial under which execution the money was raised and brought into court.⁴³

Where the proceeds of an execution sale are paid to a party not entitled thereto they are in general recoverable back.

Where the proceeds of an execution sale are paid over to a party not entitled thereto, they are generally recoverable back.⁴⁴ Especially is this so where the payment was on an agreement to refund under certain conditions.⁴⁵ When however an officer erroneously levied on and sold property under a writ other than the one first delivered to him and paid the proceeds to a bona fide junior lienor, it has been held that the only remedy of the senior lienor was against the officer for breach of duty.⁴⁶ Where property is sold under a judgment which is subsequently reversed, recovery may be had only from the party who obtained the erroneous judgment, and not from creditors who merely filed their claims after the judgment was entered and received only what was justly due them.⁴⁷

After payment of the executions in the hands of the officer, the remaining proceeds of an execution sale are payable to the execution debtor or his representative in the absence of other liens or claims. Adverse claims to surplus proceeds may be asserted by motion or, in case the right is not clear, the claimant may be remitted to his action.

Where a sheriff has satisfied all executions placed in his hands, and there are no liens on the property which were transferred to the proceeds by virtue of the sale, the execution debtor or his representative is entitled to any surplus remaining in the sheriff's hands,⁴⁸ unless he is estopped from claiming it,⁴⁹ as where the right to the surplus is shown to be in some third person who was the real owner of the property⁵⁰ or who held an equitable title thereto.⁵¹ This right to the surplus exists even where the property is subject to a prior lien if the lien is not displaced by the sale,⁵² and passes to a receiver appointed in proceedings supplementary to an execution against the debtor.⁵³ The sheriff cannot retain such surplus for a debt due to himself⁵⁴ or for expenses which he incurred without legal authority.⁵⁵ If the sheriff states in his deed that he has received the price, although he has not, he will be responsible for any balance due the debtor,⁵⁶ unless the latter, with knowledge of the facts, accepts a reconveyance from the purchaser on conditions stipulated between themselves.⁵⁷ Where the debtor bids in the land for a sum greater than the amount of the execution and costs, the so-called surplus coming back to himself cannot be impounded as an asset.⁵⁸

As between the execution debtor and his grantee the rule is well settled that a grantee of property which has been sold under a judgment against the grantor, which was a prior lien upon the property, is entitled to any surplus remaining after the satisfaction of such judgment.⁵⁹ This is equally true where the grantee himself becomes the purchaser at the execution sale.⁶⁰

Other creditors. If there are other executions against the same debtor in the hands of the sheriff,⁶¹ or in the hands of another officer,⁶² the surplus should be applied thereon, even though there has been no levy under the other executions, where a levy is not necessary to create a lien.⁶³ Likewise, if other liens are displaced by the sale, such lienors are entitled to the surplus in the order of priority of their liens.⁶⁴ This rule applies to a mortgagee where the lien is displaced by the sale and the mortgage is a junior lien;⁶⁵ but generally, where land is sold subject to a prior mortgage, the surplus proceeds, in the absence of other liens thereon, must be returned to the judgment debtor, and not paid to the mortgagee who must look to the land for the satisfaction of the mortgage.⁶⁶ Where the mortgagee of personal property bids it in on an execution sale against the mortgagor, thereby waiving the priority of his mortgage lien over the execution lien, the mortgagee is entitled to the surplus as against the execution debtor.⁶⁷ In some states the proceeds of an execution sale of land are considered realty, so that the surplus should be treated as land and paid over to the judgment creditors having liens on the land according to the priority of their judgment liens.⁶⁸

Recovery. The court has control over the surplus money, and if at the time of the sale the property was subject to, or bound by, subsequent judgments and executions, it may require such surplus to be brought into court to be distributed.⁶⁹ In some jurisdictions the sheriff may file a bill in interpleader after several claims have been made to surplus money in his hands.⁷⁰ The person entitled to the surplus may sue the sheriff or purchaser therefor,⁷¹ or may make application for the payment of such surplus by motion in the action in which the execution was issued.⁷² Where, however, claimant's right to such surplus is not clear, his remedy is an action against the sheriff or the party who has received the surplus and not by summary proceedings.⁷³ Where the surplus is paid into court in a proceeding to which the then owner of the property is not a party, an order of the court disposing of it, without notice to and without the knowledge or consent of such owner, is without jurisdiction and void.⁷⁴

Generally the sheriff may distribute the proceeds of an execution sale to the parties entitled thereto in the absence of conflicting claims, but at his own risk. Under some circumstances he should hold the proceeds subject to the court's order and apply to the court for directions on notice to all claimants, or pay the money into court and thereby free himself from responsibility. Under some statutes the officer may compel contesting claimants to interplead.

The general rule is that a sheriff may distribute the proceeds of an execution sale to the parties entitled thereto, in the absence of conflicting claims, although he does so at his own risk and is liable to the party injured for any mistake;⁷⁵ but where the proceeds of an execution sale are the subject of conflicting claims of which the sheriff has due notice he cannot proceed to the distribution thereof, but should hold the money until the claims are settled, unless otherwise directed by the court.⁷⁶ If the sheriff is in doubt, he may pay the proceeds into the court, and thereby exonerate himself from responsibility,⁷⁷ otherwise he should apply to the court for instructions as to the proper disposition of the fund.⁷⁸ It is the practice in some states, where there are conflicting claims to the proceeds of a sale, for the officer to make a return setting forth the various claims and to ask the court to make an order regulating the distribution of such proceeds;⁷⁹ but where the sheriff takes an indemnifying bond from one of the creditors, and sells in consequence of that indemnity, he cannot afterward apply to the court for its advice as to the distribution of the fund raised by the sale.⁸⁰ On a distribution, neither the sheriff, auditor, nor the court can inquire into the judgment under which the sale was made, the proper practice being to move to open the judgment.⁸¹

Notice. On an application by the officer for an order of distribution, all claimants of the proceeds should be notified that they may come in, make themselves parties, and submit their claims for decision;⁸² but where the proceeds are in court in compliance with an order therefor, and the parties in interest are before it, an order for distribution may be made without giving notice of a hearing thereon.⁸³ By statute in some jurisdictions the sheriff may compel the contesting claimants of the fund to interplead;⁸⁴ but it is doubtful whether he can do this without statutory authority.⁸⁵ If, however, the sheriff seizes property claimed by a person against whom there is no execution, he is a wrongdoer if the claim be just and he cannot compel the claimant and the execution debtor to interplead.⁸⁶

b. Power of Court

The court out of which execution issues may control the disposition of the proceeds of a sale where the money is in court or in the sheriff's hands subject to the court's order. It may also compel the sheriff to bring such money into court in a proper case.

The power of the court in a summary way to adjust priorities among contending executions and to dispose of moneys arising from sales has been exercised in many instances and is well settled.⁸⁷ The court out of which the execution issued has power to distribute the proceeds,⁸⁸ but it will not interfere unless the money is paid into court,⁸⁹ or is in the Payment into court. The court from which the execution issued has the power, in a proper case and on application, to compel the sheriff to bring the money into court,⁹⁵ but the sheriff is entitled to be heard before the order is made.⁹⁶ The court will not order the proceeds paid into court on the application of one who would not be benefited thereby, and where it would prejudice the rights of the creditor entitled to the proceeds.⁹⁷ In the absence of statutory authorization a court has no jurisdiction to compel an officer to bring into that court for distribution under its order moneys raised by virtue of the process of another court.⁹⁸

(1) In General

A claim to the proceeds of an execution sale may be asserted in various modes, as, for example, by action, by motion, by rule against the sheriff, or by an agreed case on the application of all the interested parties. The procedure and proof are subject to the practice in the particular jurisdiction.

The proper procedure of one claiming part or all of the proceeds is either by action,⁹⁹ or by motion,¹ or by rule against the sheriff to compel him to pay the proceeds into court or to distribute them in a certain way,² or by an agreed case on the application of all the interested parties, although the sheriff is not made a party.³ Where there is a doubt as to who is entitled to the proceeds, it is held in some jurisdictions that claimant will be left to his action instead of a motion or rule.⁴ Where the sheriff holds a fund which was raised on several executions in favor of different creditors, and adverse claims are asserted to it, the proper mode of procedure in some jurisdictions is for each of the claimants to take his rule against the sheriff to distribute the fund, and, since they may all be tried together, the allowance of one will be the refusal of the others.⁵ On a rule to show cause, the court may or

Rule to show cause

Where proceeds of sale by sheriff under writ of fieri facias had been distributed by sheriff or by purchaser who retained a part of purchase price and used it to satisfy judgment and mortgage which mortgage certificate furnished sheriff at time of sale disclosed were encumbrances against property, and writ had been returned satisfied and the whole matter was closed as far as sheriff was concerned, redistribution by proceeds of sale was not an "incidental matter" arising during pendency of suit so as to permit judgment debtor to obtain redistribution by a rule to show cause filed eight months following the distribution.—Southern Coal Co. v. Thibodaux & Chauvin, La.App., 181 So. 79.

der an issue to try the rights of the parties.⁶ If it is discovered that, by mistake, there is no issue of fact on the record, the court should allow one to be tendered and filed.⁷ Of course, if the money is in the custody of the court, any mode of procedure agreed on by all the interested persons cannot thereafter be attacked by any of them.⁸ In some states there are pleadings in a proceeding for a rule against the sheriff.⁹ A general verdict for the movant means that the fund should be applied to the payment of the executions held by the movant after payment of costs.¹⁰

Notice of rule. Filing an intervening petition makes one a party to the rule as effectually as a written notice of the rule given by the officer or the movant.¹¹

Parties. It has been held that it is not essential, in the first instance, that an applicant for a rule against a sheriff for a fund in his hands should make other claimants of the fund parties to the proceeding;¹² but the court will not determine priority between two executions with only one of the parties before it.¹³

Burden of proof. As in other civil proceedings, the burden of proof, as a general rule, is on the party who has the affirmative of the issue.¹⁴ One claiming under a prior unrecorded deed has the burden of proving that the execution creditor had notice of the deed.¹⁵ When a claim is based on a fieri facias the writ must be introduced in evidence or accounted for.¹⁶

(2) Bill in Equity

In some jurisdictions a bill in equity will lie to determine rival claims to the proceeds of an execution sale. Relief by injunction may be available in a proper case.

In some jurisdictions a bill in equity will lie to determine the rights of rival claimants to the proceeds of an execution sale;¹⁷ but in other jurisdictions the rule has been laid down that in a contest as to priority between several executions, or as to the relative priority between an execution and other liens, adequate relief can be obtained by rule or an application to the court out of which the executions issued, and a bill in equity will not lie.¹⁸

A claimant may maintain a bill to enjoin the sheriff from paying the proceeds to another, if there is no adequate remedy at law.¹⁹

(3) Third Opposition

Where the statute so provides, a person claiming a privilege on property sold under execution may make timely claim to the proceeds of the sale before the court which granted the order of sale or rendered the judgment by which the seizure was effected, and when the claim is properly prosecuted the court may determine its rank with other claims in a summary manner.

Under the statutes in Louisiana, where property on which a party claims a privilege is sold under execution, he should proceed by way of a third opposition to claim a priority of privilege on the proceeds of the sale.²⁰ The opponent is not required to make oath to the facts on which he bases his demand, in order to arrest the proceeds in the hands of the sheriff pending the inquiry.²¹ Such opposition should be made before the court which has granted the order of sale or rendered the judgment by virtue of which the seizure has been effected;²² and all suits and claims should be transferred to the court by whose mandate the property was seized, and such court should class them according to their rank, in a summary manner after notifying all parties in interest.²³ It is too late to make such opposition after the property has been seized, sold, and the proceeds distributed;²⁴ and, by statutory provision, an opposition will be considered as having been abandoned, where the opponent allows five years to elapse without taking any steps in the prosecution thereof; and in such case the defunct opposition cannot serve as a basis of another concursus at the suit of the original execution defendant.²⁵

(4) Pennsylvania Practice

In Pennsylvania a claimant to the proceeds of an execution sale is given specific statutory remedies by which, generally, the court from which execution issued may determine conflicting claims, direct an issue to try a disputed fact, or appoint an auditor to make distribution.

In Pennsylvania, it is provided by statute that when there are disputes concerning the distribution of the proceeds, the court from which the execution issued has power, after notice, and on the assent of all parties, to hear and determine such disputes, without ordering the payment of the money into court.²⁶ If any fact connected with such distribution is in dispute, the court may, on request of any person interested, direct an issue to try such dispute,²⁷ provided the applicant makes an affidavit as to the existence of the dispute setting forth the nature and character thereof;²⁸ but to entitle one to an issue the disputed fact must be material and relevant,²⁹ the question must be one of fact and not of law,³⁰ and the facts must not have already been decided by the court.³¹ The issue must be demanded within a proper time.³² Where the creditor applies for and procures the appointment of an auditor, he cannot afterward have an issue awarded.³³ The applicant is entitled to a hearing,³⁴ but the granting of the application for an issue is not a matter of right,³⁵ and the court may refuse to grant the issue where it must necessarily prove unavailing,³⁶ or where loss will be thrown on an innocent party by granting it.³⁷

As to the proceeds of a sale of real estate the proper procedure for a claimant is to file exceptions to the sheriff's schedule of distribution.³⁸

Lienor as purchaser. When a lien creditor has become purchaser at a sheriff's sale and has given a receipt for payment of his claim in discharge of his bid, a prior lienor who is aggrieved may except to the sheriff's return,³⁹ and the court may thereupon appoint an auditor or direct an issue to determine

Relief under statute denied

Money deposited as security

Where money had been paid to a sheriff to prevent a sale under execution, and the sheriff had deposited it in court, it was proper for the court, on motion of plaintiffs in the writs, to compel claimants to interplead with reference thereto.—Pennypacker's Appeal, 57 Pa. 114.

(1) It has been held that after a full hearing before an auditor, participated in by the applicant for an issue, a demand made after the auditor has passed on facts comes too late.—People's Sav. Bank v. Mosler, 49 A. 132, 199 Pa. 375—23 C.J. p 710 note 30.

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that the demand for an issue is in time if made on the return of the auditor's report even though the question of fact involved has been litigated before the auditor.—Sou-

conflicting claims.⁴⁰ If it be determined that the purchaser is not entitled to the proceeds the court must set aside the sale unless the money be paid to the sheriff.⁴¹ In such a case the court cannot require payment of the proceeds to the sheriff.⁴²

Auditors. The court may, when expedient, appoint auditors to make distribution⁴³ without compelling the payment of the money into court;⁴⁴ but an auditor cannot be appointed to distribute a fund where the money is not in court or within its grasp,⁴⁵ as where the sheriff has paid the money over to prior lien holders and taken their receipts;⁴⁶ and, where it appears that only one party is entitled to the fund, the sheriff will be directed to pay it to him without subjecting him to the cost of an audit.⁴⁷ The auditor has no authority to inquire into the validity of a judgment in due form rendered by a court of record,⁴⁸ but he may disregard a judgment which is void on its face⁴⁹ and for that purpose ascertain the facts which go to show that it is void.⁵⁰ It is within his jurisdiction to determine the ownership of the judgment.⁵¹ His report to the court should recite the facts proved and not the evidence; this part of his report should be in effect a case stated or special verdict.⁵²

d. Order or Decree

General rules apply with reference to the order or decree in proceedings as to distribution.

No change in the mode of appropriating the proceeds of a sale specifically disposed of by a decree can be made except by opening and correcting the decree.⁵³ If a pro rata distribution has been agreed on by the parties, an order of court omitting the specific amounts to be paid is not for that reason insufficient.⁵⁴ An ex parte order to the sheriff to pay the proceeds to another does not bind a party to the suit or protect the sheriff.⁵⁵

e. Costs

Costs are usually charged against the fund when the unsuccessful claimant shows probable cause for his objection; but otherwise the costs may be charged against him.

In the distribution by an auditor or by the court of the proceeds of an execution sale, costs do not necessarily fall upon the unsuccessful claimant; where he shows probable cause for his objection or litigation, the costs are usually charged against the fund.⁵⁶ Where, however, the ground of the contest was merely the suspicion of fraud, collusion, or lack of consideration, unsupported by the evidence, the costs of the proceedings will not be allowed out of the fund, but will be charged to the unsuccessful claimant.⁵⁷

f. Appeal

A party who complies with the requirements of statutes conferring the right may appeal from an order distributing the proceeds of an execution sale.

Unless a party claiming an interest in the proceeds of an execution sale has not complied with the statute with regard to the allowance of his claim,⁵⁸ he has a right of appeal from an order or decree of court distributing the fund.⁵⁹ It has been held in one jurisdiction that the appellate court will appropriate the money to the creditor entitled to it whether he excepts or not to the order of the court below,⁶⁰ while in another jurisdiction it has been held that a creditor who neglects to appeal cannot be relieved by the appellate court although it clearly appears that he is entitled to the money in contest.⁶¹ A decision of the appellate court on the re-

§ 253. Right to Redeem Generally

- a. General considerations
- b. Redemption of part
- c. Agreements as to redemption

a. General Considerations

The right to redeem from an execution sale is purely statutory in the absence of an agreement between the interested parties.

The right to redeem property from sale under execution is purely statutory,⁶³ except where based on an agreement of the parties, considered infra subdivision c of this section.

The right to redeem is not one which may be enforced in a court of equity as of course,⁶⁴ although under certain circumstances, where the statutory right of redemption has been denied or defeated, a court of equity has jurisdiction, as shown infra § 261.

Equity of redemption as subject to execution see supra § 45.

Redemption of property set off under statutes of extents or elegits see infra § 404.

Possession of purchaser during period for redemption see infra § 303.

Right to redeem from execution or judicial sale as subject of execution see supra § 40.

Effect of absence of right

(1) Owner of property sold under execution loses power to regain property after confirmation, if property is not subject to redemption.—Messer v. American Eagle Fire Ins. Co., 12 S.W.2d 358, 227 Ky. 3.

(2) Sale of leasehold within two years before term expires, under execution issued at either secured or unsecured creditor's request, confers absolute title.—Crystal Petroleum Products Corporation v. Abbott, 264 P. 810, 89 Cal.App. 421.

Law of redemption

(1) Law of redemption is a statute which confers on the party where land is sold for debt by executions, etc., the right to redeem or repurchase the land within a limited time after the sale.—Reynolds v. Baker, 6 Coldw., Tenn., 221.

(2) The view has been expressed that the law of redemption is a law of property.—Reynolds v. Baker, supra.

Nature of right and distinctions

(1) "Right of redemption" arises only after the sale of property and exists only for the period prescribed by law.—Brown v. Timmons, 256 P. 176, 79 Mont. 246, 57 A.L.R. 1122.

(2) The right of the debtor to redeem is not an "equity of redemption" in the sense of the law of mortgages.—Reynolds v. Baker, 6 Coldw., Tenn., 221.

(3) "Equity of redemption" and "legal right to redeem" have, however, been used synonymously, and it has been stated that "an equity of redemption, or legal right to redeem is that right which the owner of property has to regain the complete title to his property by the payment to the purchaser of the amount for which the property was sold, with interest and penalties, in accordance with the provisions of the statute."—Messer v. American Eagle Fire Ins. Co., 12 S.W.2d 358, 360, 227 Ky. 3.

(4) The right of the debtor to redeem is not an estate or interest in the land.—Reynolds v. Baker, supra.

(5) The right to redeem is not a property right but is a mere privilege of statutory origin.—Brown v. Timmons, supra—Leonard v. Western, 241 P. 523, 74 Mont. 513.

(6) The distinction between "sale" and "redemption" referred to in statutes governing execution sales and redemption therefrom is fundamental.—Corporation of America v. Eustace, 17 P.2d 723, 217 Cal. 102.

(7) "Redeem" means repurchase, and as used in Rev.Codes 1921 §§ 9441-9448, as applied to redemption, signifies right to purchase interest acquired by purchaser, whether purchaser is willing or not.—Leonard v. Western, supra.

Public policy

It is the public policy of some states that a debtor who has lost his land under execution sale shall have the right to regain it by complying with the conditions imposed.—Dipple v. Neville, 267 P. 214, 83 Mont. 280—Hamilton v. Hamilton, 154 P. 717, 51 Mont. 509.

Right in law to redeem from sale exists only when given by statute.—Lopez v. McQuade, 273 N.Y.S. 34, 151 Misc. 390.

Specific execution

(1) Whether execution was specific was immaterial as respects right of judgment debtors' grantees to redeem from sale thereunder.—Arkansas Nat. Bank v. Price, 15 S.W.2d 396, 179 Ark. 259.

(2) That court ordered clerk to issue and deliver to sheriff a "specific execution" and also ordered latter to levy such execution on all real estate of debtors in county when judgment was rendered and any real estate acquired by them thereafter prior to four months before the date of their adjudication in bankruptcy did not change the writ as an execution so far as the right of redemption thereunder was concerned.—Arkansas Nat. Bank v. Price, supra.

Effect of bill to annul judgment

Where a sale of land under execution was made pending a suit by the judgment creditor to vacate and annul the judgment, it was proper for the court, in such suit, to assure plaintiff a right to redeem.—King v. Dent, 93 So. 823, 208 Ala. 78.

Repeal of statute and saving clause

The saving clause of L.1921 p 500, which repealed in certain respects the act of July 1, 1917, governing judgments and decrees, applied to the redemption of lands from certificates of levy.—Reardon v. Taft, 235 Ill.App. 75.

64. Colo.—Paddock v. Staley, 58 P. 363, 18 Colo.App. 363.

The general rule in equity is that the right to redeem from a sale exists only when given by statute.—

To enable one to redeem he must conform to the requirements of the statute.⁶⁵ He must take the privilege burdened with all its restrictions,⁶⁶ or, as sometimes stated, the privilege may be exercised only on the conditions prescribed.⁶⁷

Construction and constitutionality of statutes. While a liberal construction is to be given to statutes allowing redemption, to the end that the property of the debtor may pay as many debts as possible,⁶⁸ or, as sometimes stated, to accomplish the beneficent purpose of the statute,⁶⁹ the right or privilege conferred is a statutory one that is not to be enlarged by judicial construction,⁷⁰ and may be exercised only in the instances provided in the statute.⁷¹

Where statutes give the right of redemption on execution sales or change the mode of procedure or the redemption period or other matters relating thereto, it is usually held that such statutes have no retroactive effect.⁷² As to the constitutionality of such statutes in respect of violation of vested rights see the C.J.S. title Constitutional Law § 235; in respect of impairment of obligations of contracts see § 391 of such title.

Property subject to redemption. The question as to what type of property is subject to redemption depends on the terms of the applicable statute duly construed.⁷³ If land may properly be levied on and sold under execution, redemption from such sale is permissible under the terms of some statutes.⁷⁴

Surrender of possession

Under some statutes the execution debtor forfeits his right to redeem by failure to comply with a written demand for possession of the land sold, made by the purchaser at the execution sale in accordance with the applicable statute.—Bonner v. Lockhart, 181 So. 767, 236 Ala. 171.

Sale to enforce lien

Where the execution purchaser of land subject to a lien again purchases the property on the sale to enforce the lien, the execution debtor had the right to redeem under statute only as to the purchase at the execution sale, and not as to the lien foreclosure.—Jones v. Hopper, 5 Ky.Op. 379.

Retroactive operation of statutes generally see C.J.S. title Statutes §§ 412-440, also 59 C.J. p 1158 note 13-p 1196 note 61.

In Arkansas

(1) It was held that statute authorizing redemption applied notwithstanding the debt on which the judgment and execution sale were based was contracted before the enactment of such statute.—Turner v. Watkins, 31 Ark. 429—23 C.J. p 713 note 75.

(2) It was also held, however, that, in view of the provision of the applicable statute that no proceedings in pursuance of its provisions before a specified subsequent date shall be rendered invalid by the statute, there was no right to redeem from a sale made during the period intermediate the date of enactment and such subsequent date, under an execution levied during such period, where the judgment was recovered prior to the enactment of the statute.—Dennis v. Tomlinson, 6 S.W. 11, 49 Ark. 568.

73. In Arkansas

(1) The terms "real property," "real estate," "land," and "premises,"

as used in the statutes, Crawford & M.Dig. c 59 §§ 4323-4333, concerning the sale of real property under execution and redemption from such sale, are used, interchangeably and mean the same thing.—Munson v. Wade, 298 S.W. 25, 174 Ark. 880.

(2) Lease of lands for a term for the purpose of growing crops is regarded as personal property and, therefore, not redeemable as real estate under § 4329 of such Digest; nor may it be regarded as an interest in real estate redeemable under such section.—Munson v. Wade, supra.

(3) Leasehold interest is not to be regarded as real estate redeemable under such section merely because of the provision of § 4271 of the above Digest that every unexpired lease of land shall be subject to execution and sale as real estate.—Munson v. Wade, supra.

In Kansas

Statute relating to redemption of real property from a sale on execution does not apply to the incorporeal hereditament created by license to mine for oil and gas, and, if mineral be discovered, to produce and take care of the product.—National Supply Co. v. McLeod, 227 P. 350, 116 Kan. 477.

In Oregon, under Lord L. §§ 240, 244, Code 1930 3-408, 3-501, a judgment debtor can redeem realty, but he cannot redeem personally when sold on execution.—Roseburg Nat. Bank v. Camp, 173 P. 313, 89 Or. 67.

74. Tenn.—Shea v. Rucker, 72 S.W. 2d 551, 167 Tenn. 550.

Land subject to homestead

Where debtor received homestead's value on execution sale, his wife, purchasing from execution creditor, who purchased at such sale, acquired property subject to statutory rights, as regards redemption, of husband's

b. Redemption of Part

Usually different parcels of land which have been sold en masse must be redeemed en masse; separate redemption is permitted when and only when there have been separate sales.

Under the redemption statutes the general rule is that, where different parcels of land are sold en masse, they must be redeemed en masse and cannot be redeemed in separate parcels,⁷⁵ unless the purchaser consents thereto.⁷⁶ It is otherwise, however, where several parcels of land are sold separately.⁷⁷

If the debtor has no title to part of the property sold, he may be allowed to redeem the rest on payment of the full amount due.⁷⁸

Under the terms of some statutes the right of a judgment creditor of one of two owners of undivided fractional interests in the same real property, which have been sold at execution sale to redeem, depends on payment of the full amount of the sales price,⁷⁹ but under other statutes, where lands held in common are sold under execution, the judgment creditor of one of the owners may redeem the interest of his debtor without redeeming the whole tract of land sold.⁸⁰ Independent of statute, one joint debtor or his creditor cannot redeem his moiety.⁸¹

c. Agreements as to Redemption

An agreement for redemption between the execution purchaser and the execution debtor is valid and enforceable where the elements of a binding contract are present.

An agreement between the execution purchaser and the execution debtor, to allow redemption or to extend the term therefor, is valid and enforceable by the debtor,⁸² provided it is based on a sufficient consideration,⁸³ and provided the debtor complies with the terms of the agreement within the time stipulated or contemplated.⁸⁴

It has been held in some jurisdictions that such agreements are valid even when made by parol;⁸⁵ but there is authority to the contrary.⁸⁶ An instrument which constitutes an attempt to reduce to writing the prior parol agreement may be looked to in determining the conditions of, and limitations on, the debtor's right to redeem.⁸⁷ The view has been expressed that it is not necessary to the validity of the agreement that a time for such redemption be fixed,⁸⁸ and the consent of junior judgment creditors is not necessary.⁸⁹ An agreement by one

Particular property

Cemetery sold at auction under execution, distinct from other church property, and for a separate price, could be redeemed by judgment debtor's assignee on basis of that price without redeeming all property.—Dziatlik v. Holy Trinity Polish Nat. Catholic Church, 166 A. 284, 86 N.H. 234.

78. Ala.—Richardson v. Dunn, 79 Ala. 167.

Other property improperly included in sale

In a case in which a sale in bulk included property of the execution debtor and also property which he did not own, it was stated, in holding that such a sale was not permissible, that in order to redeem his own property the execution debtor would have been required to tender the whole amount bid at the sale, as there was no way to determine the amount bid for his property.—Vaughan v. Screeton, 39 S.W.2d 299, 183 Ark. 816.

There must be clear proof of such an agreement for redemption.—Abernathy v. Hoke, 37 N.C. 157—23 C.J. p 713 note 84 [a].

Effect of subsequent contract

Where execution creditor bid off property under agreement to hold for debtor's benefit and permit him to redeem, and afterward so-called contract of tenancy was made, providing for tenancy at will, such contract may establish debtor's right to redeem as existing so long as tenancy exists, and debtor remains in possession, paying the "rent" or interest contracted for.—Broadwell v.

of the joint owners of a sheriff's certificate of sale has been regarded as binding on all the joint owners.⁹⁰

While a different view has been taken in regard to some agreements of the general type here under consideration,⁹¹ according to some cases, the purchaser only acquires a mortgage interest in the property under such an agreement, and another creditor may maintain a bill to redeem or require a sale and distribution of the proceeds,⁹² and one who agrees to purchase property at an execution sale, and hold title as a mortgagee subject to redemption, acquires no other title, and the debtor may redeem at any time, the transaction amounting to a trust.⁹³

A purchaser at a subsequent execution sale of a judgment debtor's rights under an agreement to redeem has been held to be in the same position as that of an assignee of the agreement.⁹⁴ Where the purchaser of a lot under execution, for much less than its value, has agreed with defendant in execution to release him whenever he reimburses the amount paid, if defendant afterward sells the lot, his purchaser is entitled, by subrogation, to redeem.⁹⁵

Against whom enforced. A contract by which the parties stipulate that defendant in execution shall have the right to redeem is enforceable against the wife of plaintiff in execution, where he purchases and procures the deed to be made to the wife for the purpose of defeating such contract.⁹⁶ An agreement to extend the time is binding on a purchaser with notice;⁹⁷ but the agreement should not be enforced against an innocent purchaser from the execution purchaser.⁹⁸ If the purchaser sells to an innocent person before the time agreed on expires, the sale need not be set aside, but the purchaser may be charged with the full value of the property without regard to the amount for which he sold it.⁹⁹

§ 254. Persons Entitled to Redeem

- a. General considerations
- b. Judgment debtor or his successor in interest
- c. Execution creditor
- d. Other creditors of execution debtor
- e. Purchaser at execution, foreclosure, or tax sale

a. General Considerations

Only such persons as are designated in the applicable statute have the right to redeem.

Only the persons designated in the statute may redeem.¹ Of course, as between the parties, anyone may redeem if the purchaser consents thereto.²

Under some statutes one who owns a separate part of the land sold or has some interest therein may redeem the whole tract,³ but the right of a tenant in common of the execution debtor to redeem has been denied in the absence of statutory authorization.⁴

In general the statutory right to redeem is assignable, and the assignee succeeds to all the right and interest of his assignor.⁵

Under some statutes a second redemption or a series of redemptions is permissible under certain circumstances.⁶

b. Judgment Debtor or His Successor in Interest

Usually the redemption statutes authorize redemption by the judgment or execution debtor and his assignee or grantee.

Generally, by statute, a judgment or execution debtor may redeem property sold on execution against him, by compliance with the statutory provisions within the time designated therein,⁷ and

this right extends to his assignee⁸ or grantee,⁹ and under some statutes to his devisees, heirs, and personal representatives.¹⁰ By the express terms of some statutes the right to redeem is given to the successor in interest of the judgment debtor.¹¹ While the view has been taken that the grantee of the judgment debtor under a deed absolute in form, but intended only as security, may redeem as grantee,¹² under some statutes such grantee may redeem only as a creditor.¹³

A subsequent levy of execution on, or sale of, the property under another execution does not defeat the right under some statutes.¹⁴ So under some statutes another creditor who is in a position to redeem cannot reach and subject to sale this statutory right, and the filing of a bill in equity for that purpose is no obstacle to a redemption by the

debtor or an assignment by him of his right to redeem.¹⁵ It has been held that the legality of a redemption which complies with the statute in all respects is not affected by the fact that defendant before making such redemption had previously obtained an order of court restraining the sheriff from issuing any deed or from paying over any redemption money pending an appeal from an order denying a motion to set aside the sale and certificate of sale.¹⁶

Under some statutes defendant's right to redeem within the statutory period is lost in case he appeals or causes the execution to be stayed.¹⁷ Such a statute should be strictly construed,¹⁸ and it has been held that the right of the judgment debtor to redeem is not defeated by virtue of such statute by reason of an appeal taken in an auxiliary suit

Inconsistent attitude

The right of redemption is purely statutory, and one who redeems from an execution sale as owner cannot insist on a subsequent execution sale that he redeemed as a judgment creditor.—Marty v. Paul, 226 P. 150, 152, 75 Colo. 446, citing Corpus Juris.

Assignment of right independent of interest in property

The right of redemption from an execution sale of real property given by California Code Civ.Proc. § 701, to the judgment debtor or his successor in interest in the whole or any part of the property, is a property right which is assignable by a judgment debtor independently of any transfer of an interest in the property.—Big Sespe Oil Co. v. Cochran, C.C.A.Cal., 276 F. 216.

Assignment to purchaser at prior sale

Where conveyance under federal court sale was not recorded, and property was subsequently sold under execution in state court, judgment debtor could assign right of redemption to heirs of purchaser under federal court sale, who could redeem as assignees of right of redemption.—*Shea v. Method of transfer

(1) A conveyance of land by the judgment debtors after the execution sale transfers the right to redeem, even in the absence thereof of a reference to the right to redeem.—Gray v. C. A. Harris & Son, 93 P.2d 385, 200 Wash. 181.

(2) It was pointed out, however, that the deed involved in express terms conveyed the right to redeem, and that, in addition, there was a written assignment of the right to redeem so that there was no question as to the transferee's right to redeem, provided there was due compliance with the applicable statute.—Gray v. C. A. Harris & Son, supra.

Agreement to permit redemption

Where the purchaser at execution sale made an agreement with the owner to release the real property involved to the owner on payment by the latter to the purchaser of the full amount for which the property was sold, a vendee of such owner acquired the right to redeem.—Du-puy v. McMillan, 2 Duv., Ky., 555.

Grantee under fraudulent conveyance

The right to redeem of a grantee under a fraudulent conveyance from the judgment debtor has been denied.—R. T. Elswick & Co. v. Scott, 8 S.W.2d 398, 225 Ky. 309—Warden v. Troutman, 74 S.W. 1085, 25 Ky.L. 247.

Sole right in grantee

Absolute conveyance of lands before judgment recovered against debtor vested right to redeem from subsequent execution sale solely in grantee, under St.1929 § 272.40.—

Redemption from both sales

It was held that, where land was sold under two different judgments, at different times, a redemption from both sales could be made at one time by the judgment debtor, within a year from the first sale, by paying the two amounts for which the property was sold.—Harrison v. Wilmering, 32 N.W. 279, 72 Iowa 727.

Limited operation of statute

The view has been taken that the prohibition applies only to a party who is the debtor.—Quinn v. First Nat. Bank, 206 N.W. 271, 200 Iowa 1384—Sieben v. Becker, 3 N.W. 804, 53 Iowa 24.

in equity brought by the judgment creditor in aid of execution under his judgment.¹⁹ So, also, it has been held that the statute does not apply where an appeal is taken after the execution sale.²⁰

Right as affected by ownership or extent or nature of interest. While it has been stated that only the owner has the right to redeem,²¹ under some statutes the execution debtor's right to redeem real estate cannot be defeated by showing title in a third person, and he may redeem whatever interest he may have.²² So some statutes do not make actual ownership at the time of sale or redemption a condition precedent, the right following the person and not the land and continuing for the period prescribed by the statute, although the debtor meanwhile may have parted with his title,²³ particularly where the family of the debtor retains a homestead interest in the property with resultant right of possession in him, as head of the family, jointly with his wife.²⁴ It has been held that a debtor whose equity of redemption has been subsequently foreclosed cannot redeem.²⁵

Under some statutes a judgment debtor who has held as tenant for a term under a lease of land for the purpose of growing crops does not have such an interest as will permit him to redeem from a sale of the lease under execution.²⁶

Ownership at time of sale

(1) Actual ownership of land at time of sale is not condition precedent to execution debtor's right to redeem land, under Code 1932 § 7736, which right follows person and is predicated on sale of judgment debtor's interest in land and not on character or extent of title.—Shea v. Rucker, 72 S.W.2d 551, 167 Tenn. 550.

(2) Where conveyance under federal court sale was not recorded, and property was subsequently sold under execution in state court, judgment debtor could redeem property, and debtor's resumption of title would inure to benefit of heirs of purchaser under federal court sale since as between such purchaser and debtor title was in purchaser.—Shea v. Rucker, supra.

Priority

Under some statutes the judgment of the execution creditor who purchases remains senior to a subsequent judgment and he has a prior right to redeem within the time limited and to purchase at, and obtain title under, a second sale, notwithstanding the holder of the junior judgment attempts to redeem and to acquire title at another sale.—Crowder v. Scott State Bank of Bethany, supra.

c. Execution Creditor

Under some, but not under all, statutes the creditor under whose judgment the sale is made may redeem.

Under some statutes a creditor by virtue of whose judgment the property of the debtor is sold has a statutory right to redeem the same from the purchaser,²⁷ as, for example, an execution creditor who himself purchases for less than the amount of his judgment.²⁸ Other statutes have been differently construed, and the right of redemption is not accorded to such creditor,²⁹ even though the purchase money was wholly applied to prior executions.³⁰ As to any other judgments which he holds, however, such creditor has the same rights as any other creditor,³¹ and, under some statutes, the execution creditor may redeem as holder of the legal title where he holds under a deed in the chain of title based on a tax sale of the same property.³²

d. Other Creditors of Execution Debtor

Judgment creditors of the execution debtor, other than the creditor under whose judgment the sale is made, are frequently accorded the statutory right to redeem, as are persons who hold mortgages on the property sold.

Usually provision is made according to a subsequent judgment creditor of the same debtor the right to redeem the property,³³ and, unless there

Deficiency on sale

A judgment lien holder, after he has once sold land on execution, cannot redeem from his own sale in case it produces less than the whole amount of his judgment, and thereby restore the lien of his judgment and subject the property to resale as if no previous sale had been made.—Hervey v. Creditors of person whose land is sold

Only judgment creditors of the person or persons whose land is sold under execution and creditors who have judgments or decrees which may be enforced by a sale of land as to which redemption is sought are in-

is statutory provision to the contrary,³⁴ this includes judgments confessed,³⁵ provided they are confessed or entered in good faith.³⁶

Under some statutes a senior judgment creditor may redeem from a sale under a junior judgment,³⁷ or any judgment creditor either senior or junior may redeem.³⁸ Some statutes permit a junior judgment creditor who purchases at an execution sale under a senior judgment to redeem, although such redemption is in effect a redemption from himself.³⁹

Under some statutes a surety who pays a judgment against his principal is entitled to redeem,⁴⁰ while under others he is not.⁴¹

The creditor may redeem, although he has other security for his debt.⁴² A judgment creditor is entitled to redeem land sold under an execution against the judgment debtor, although the note on which his judgment was obtained included an amount for which there was no indebtedness, if any part of the note represented a bona fide indebtedness.⁴³ One who is a judgment creditor of, and administrator on, an estate may redeem land belonging to the estate, which has been sold for the payment of debts, and hold the same as any redeeming creditor, notwithstanding his status as fiduciary.⁴⁴ Where land is sold under an execution levied before the recording of a deed previously executed, the grantee is not entitled to redeem as a creditor under the statute.⁴⁵

The reversal, for irregularity or error, of the judgment which is the authority to redeem, after redemption, does not necessarily invalidate the title of the redemptioner, see infra § 263 b; but, under some statutes, a judgment creditor is not entitled to redeem where his judgment is reversed after his offer to redeem, and a new judgment recovered on the same cause of action is not rendered until after the expiration of the time to redeem.⁴⁶

It has been held or recognized that, where an entire tract of land has been sold at a foreclosure or execution sale, a creditor having a lien on a part only of the tract may redeem the whole thereof,⁴⁷ although the rule is otherwise under some statutes.⁴⁸ Under some statutes, where two lots of ground have been sold together, under an execution, a judgment creditor who seeks to redeem from such sale must cause the lots to be sold together, under his judgment, as they were sold under the original judgment, in order to consummate his redemption,⁴⁹ and, if, after paying the redemption money, he causes the lots to be sold separately, and bids them in for a less sum, he will be regarded as having abandoned his redemption, and as having made his sale wholly independently of it.⁵⁰ A judgment creditor may redeem the balance where part of the property sold has been redeemed by other creditors.⁵¹

cluded and a judgment creditor of one who has no interest in, or title to, such land is not entitled to redeem.—Leach v. Torbert, 204 P. 334, 71 Colo. 85.

Judgment on order dismissing appeal

Party entering judgment for amount of costs on order dismissing with costs appeal of adverse party was regarded as a judgment creditor entitled to redeem, notwithstanding the judgment was for a small amount.—Foley v. Carter, 212 N.Y.S. 381, 214 App.Div. 292.

Judgment for foreclosure of mechanic's lien

The fact that one's judgment was for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien did not affect his right to redeem, under statute providing that any judgment creditor of one whose land is sold under execution has such right.—Paddock v. Staley, 58 P. 363, 13 Colo.App. 363.

Naked right to redeem

Naked right to redeem is the only right which creditors under junior judgments have after execution sale under senior judgment.—Paddock v. Staley, supra.

Duty of court officer

The bailiff of the municipal court was not under a duty to determine whether there was consideration for a note on which the judgment of a judgment creditor who sought to redeem was recovered or whether the note was given collusively in order to permit such redemption.—*Hooper v. mortgage, although fraudulent as to creditors, before redeeming from an execution sale.⁵²

Under some statutes there may be successive redemptions by judgment creditors under certain circumstances,⁵³ but some statutes do not permit a creditor to redeem after the debtor or his assignee has redeemed.⁵⁴

Restrictions imposed by some statutes on the right of redemption in case of appeal or stay of execution have no application to creditors holding liens,⁵⁵ particularly where an appeal is taken after the execution sale.⁵⁶ It has been held that the fact that plaintiff has appealed from a judgment in his favor on the ground that the amount recovered is inadequate does not prevent him from redeeming, as a judgment creditor, from a prior execution sale of property of the judgment debtor.⁵⁷

Under some statutes a judgment creditor, otherwise entitled to redeem, may redeem from a person who has purchased the land from the purchaser at the execution sale.⁵⁸

Necessity for judgment. Subject to certain qualifications hereinafter noted usually only such creditors as have reduced their claims to judgment may redeem.⁵⁹

Necessity for lien. A judgment creditor, to be entitled to redeem, need not have a lien on the property involved,⁶⁰ unless by the terms of the statute itself only lien creditors may exercise the right,⁶¹ in which latter case, if the judgment has ceased to be a lien, the creditor's right to redeem ceases.⁶² An estate for years cannot be redeemed where the judgment lien does not extend thereto.⁶³

Time when judgment recovered. The words "any judgment creditor," as used in redemption statutes, have been construed in some states as meaning any creditor having a judgment on which execution may issue at the time he seeks to redeem, without regard to the time when the judgment may have been recovered;⁶⁴ and it is immaterial whether the judgment was obtained, or the cause of action accrued, before or after the debtor's period of redemption has expired.⁶⁵ Where the statute does not so provide, the right is not limited to judgment creditors at the time of sale, but extends to those becoming such creditors after the sale but within the time allowed for redemption.⁶⁶

Under some statutes there is a priority among judgment creditors with regard to the right to redeem, dependent on seniority of the judgment held,⁶⁷ but under other statutes there is no such priority.⁶⁸

Assignee of judgment. Some statutes authorize the assignee of a judgment creditor to redeem.⁶⁹ So it has been held that the assignee of a judgment is a judgment creditor within the contemplation of some statutes, and as such is entitled to redeem property sold under execution if otherwise within the statute;⁷⁰ but there is authority to the contrary.⁷¹

Mortgagee and his transferee. Under most of the redemption statutes, a mortgagee whose mortgage has been properly recorded is entitled to redeem from such sale,⁷² provided, under some statutes, the mortgage is given by the judgment debtor and covers a mortgageable interest of the debtor in the land.⁷³ However, under some statutes, a mortgagee cannot redeem from a sale under an execution on a judgment junior to the mortgage.⁷⁴

Under some statutes the conveyance by a mortgagee, who has a right to redeem, of his interest in the land involved to the judgment debtor constitutes the latter an assignee with right to redeem.⁷⁵

Attachment creditors. Attachment creditors are entitled to redeem under the express provisions of some statutes,⁷⁶ but under other statutes attaching creditors are not entitled to redeem as lien holders,⁷⁷ before the claim is reduced to judgment.⁷⁸

e. Purchaser at Execution, Foreclosure, or Tax Sale

Under some statutes the purchaser at a sale under process or forced sale may be entitled to redeem from another sale of the same property under execution.

Under some statutes the purchaser at an execution sale may redeem from another sale as the successor in interest of the judgment debtor,⁷⁹ although it has been held that a purchaser at execution sale who has not yet obtained a sheriff's deed cannot redeem from another sale as the grantee of the execution debtor.⁸⁰

It has been held that a purchaser of real estate at execution sale subject to a prior judgment lien, who has obtained a valid sheriff's deed, may redeem as owner from a subsequent sale under the prior judgment.⁸¹ Under a statute which limits the right to redeem to holders of liens junior to that of the judgment under which the sale is made, the view has been taken that the holder of a certificate of sale under a junior judgment may redeem from a sale under a prior judgment, as a judgment creditor,⁸² but that the holder of a certificate of sale under a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage may not redeem from a sale under a judgment which is junior to such mortgage.⁸³

The holder of a deed based on a tax sale has legal title which entitles him to redeem from an execution sale of the same real property, under a statute authorizing the holder of the legal title to redeem.⁸⁴

The right of a creditor, who purchased at the execution sale but who did not advance his bid within the time fixed by statute, to redeem from another creditor who had exercised his right to redeem has been recognized under some statutes.⁸⁵

Mortgagee who had assigned his mortgage to secure a debt owing by him was entitled to redeem for the purpose of protecting the mortgage claim.—Manning v. Markel, 19 Iowa 103.

§ 255. Waiver, Estoppel, and Laches

A person who has a statutory right to redeem may waive such right or may by his acts or conduct be estopped to claim it.

A party entitled to redeem under the statute may waive such right, or by his language or conduct be estopped from asserting it.⁸⁶ The fact, however, that a mortgagor directed a levy on his mortgaged property and was present at the sale and made no mention of any encumbrance does not estop him to redeem.⁸⁷ So an agreement between the owner of land and a stranger whereby the latter was to bid off the land and allow the owner to redeem within a year is not a waiver of the statutory right of redemption.⁸⁸

Joinder of the execution defendant with the purchaser at an execution sale in a conveyance, with covenants of warranty, of a part of the property, to a third person, is not a waiver of the right to redeem the rest of the property; it is nothing more than a waiver of the right of such purchaser to deal with the redemption on the basis of a redemption in toto only.⁸⁹

§ 256. Amount Required to Redeem

The applicable statute controls in determining the amount which must be paid by the person who seeks to redeem.

Some statutes require, as a condition to the exercise of the right to redeem, the payment of the amount of the bid or of the purchase price on the execution sale, together with a certain percentage of such amount.⁹⁰ Under such a statute the full amount of the judgment need not be paid.⁹¹ Some statutes of this general type apply to a redemption by the judgment debtor,⁹² but do not apply so as to require payment of the additional percentage where judgment creditors or subsequent lienholders exercise their right to redeem.⁹³ Included in the amount required to redeem may be such items as taxes paid by the purchaser,⁹⁴ the value of improvements⁹⁵ and repairs,⁹⁶ interest on the amount of the bid or purchase price⁹⁷ and on proper expenditures,⁹⁸ compensation for the care of the property and the collection of rents,⁹⁹ moneys properly paid in discharge of liens or encumbrances,¹ interest paid by the purchaser on a prior mortgage where the execution sale was made subject to the mortgage,² the amount due on a debt for which the Moneys rightfully paid by the purchaser to discharge a mortgage debt for the purpose of removing the mortgage encumbrance are included under some statutes.—Bonner v. Lockhart, 181 So. 767, 236 Ala. 171.

2. Failure to file receipts for mortgage interest paid

Land sold under execution, subject to a mortgage, could not be redeemed by the judgment debtor's grantee who had purchased subject to existing liens of record, without sale was made where redemption is made from the person owning such debt,³ attorney's fees,⁴ costs of the clerk connected with the act of redemption,⁵ and sheriff's fees paid by the purchaser.⁶ The phrase "lawful charges" in a statute has been held not to include insurance paid by the purchaser or the amount of a justice's judgment held by him which was not a lien on the land.⁷

Under some statutes a bona fide creditor, who purchases or redeems, may, subject to certain limitations, make an advance on, or increase in, his bid, within a specified time, and then hold the property subject to redemption at the price bid, plus such advance, just as though he had bid the whole sum at the time of the sale or redemption;⁸ but such advance or increase must be made within the time prescribed by the statute in order to be effective.⁹

If the redemptioner owns only a part of the property sold as one tract, he cannot redeem except on payment of the whole amount of the purchase price.¹⁰

A judgment defendant who redeems is not entitled to credit for a surplus after satisfaction of the execution, which has been applied on another execution on a judgment in favor of a firm in which the purchaser of the property was a partner, although such application was illegal.¹¹

The amount which must be paid depends on the method of redemption which is adopted by the redemptioner, where the statutes provide alternative methods which contemplate substantially different ways to determine the amount.¹²

Sale under several judgments. Under some statutes, where lands are sold at the same time under several judgments, a creditor cannot redeem by tendering the amount of the judgment older than his judgment, but must pay the amount bid at the sale.¹³ However, where land was sold on a junior judgment and thereafter under a senior judgment, the holder of the junior judgment may redeem from the sale under the senior judgment without redeeming from the sale under the junior judgment;¹⁴ and a junior lienholder may redeem from the first sale, where his time to redeem from the second sale has not arrived, without paying the amount for which the second sale was made.¹⁵

Amount fixed by agreement. As between the parties, the amount may be fixed by agreement.¹⁶ If the redemption is by agreement made at the time of the sale, it has been held that a fair allowance should be paid for the purchaser's time, trouble, and expenses, in addition to the price agreed on.¹⁷

Accounting for rents and profits. While in the absence of provision therefor in the statute, the court has declined to require an accounting for rents received by the purchaser,¹⁸ under some statutes, where the purchaser is given the right of possession and the rents and profits from the day of sale until redemption, such purchaser must account to the redemptioner for the rents and profits thus received by him during the interim between the sale and the redemption.¹⁹ paying to the purchaser at execution sale interest on the mortgage, paid by the latter after his purchase, notwithstanding such purchase, at the expiration of the period of redemption, had not filed with the clerk of the district court receipts showing payment of such interest, in accordance with the applicable statute, since equity required the payment of the amount of such interest by the person who sought to redeem.—*Blurton v. Sufficiency of demand for accounting

A written demand for an accounting of rents and profits made on purchaser of real property at execution sale on behalf of a corporation judgment defendant entitled to redeem, and signed by its attorney, who had previously acted for such corporation and had been recognized as such

Where a creditor, holding land by levy of an execution, subject to the debtor's right of redemption, has leased the same, the debtor, after redeeming, cannot recover of the lessee for the use and occupation prior to redemption;²⁰ nor, after redeeming, can the debtor claiming to be, by operation of law, the assignee of the rents and earnings under the lease recover of the lessee for any of the rents and earnings which accrued prior to the redemption.²¹

Where an equity of redemption of land mortgaged has been attached and sold on execution, and the purchaser has entered, and received the rents and profits, and the land has been subsequently redeemed by an assignee of the mortgage, the mortgagor cannot maintain an action against the purchaser for the same mesne profits received by him, and such right of recovery, if it exists at all, vests in the assignee.²²

If the execution debtor remains in possession, without paying rent to the purchaser, the latter is not chargeable therewith.²³ On the other hand, under some statutes a judgment debtor who is allowed to retain the property cannot be compelled, on redeeming the same, to account to the purchaser for the rents and profits.²⁴ Where a sheriff's deed for land sold under execution is invalid, and the judgment debtor remains in possession by tenant, the value of a crop seized by the purchaser from the tenant is properly credited to the judgment debtor

when the deed is set aside and the debtor allowed to redeem.²⁵

Under some statutes the liability of the purchaser to account for the rents and profits, except by way of offset to improvements made, does not arise until he is put in default by a proper tender of the amount necessary to redeem.²⁶

Payment of prior liens. Under some statutes, the execution debtor or his assignee or grantee need not, on redeeming, pay any other liens upon the property held by the purchaser.²⁷ Where, however, a subsequent judgment creditor or other lienor having the statutory right to redeem seeks to redeem the property, he is sometimes required to pay certain liens of the owner of the certificate of sale paramount to the lien under which redemption is sought,²⁸ provided, under some statutes, the owner of such certificate has taken the steps necessary to put himself in the line of redemptioners in respect of such paramount liens.²⁹ It has been held or recognized, however, that under applicable statutes, a judgment creditor, on redeeming, is not required to pay off junior liens.³⁰

§ 257. Time for Redemption

A person who seeks to redeem must exercise the right within the time fixed by the statute, in the absence of a binding agreement fixing a different time, or of the elements of an estoppel or waiver, or of grounds for equitable relief.

Redemption must be made within the time fixed by the statutes,³¹ unless the time has been extend-by the purchaser in other transactions, was legal and sufficient under Cal.Code Civ.Proc. § 707.—Big Sespe Oil Co. v. Cochran, C.C.A.Cal., 276 F. 216.

In Kentucky

(1) In view of St. § 1709, since purchaser at execution sale of land subject to a mortgage acquires only a lien and is entitled to enforcement of the lien, the execution debtor may redeem at any time until such lien is enforced and the property is sold under it, and he is not limited to one year in that regard.—Hazard Lumber & Supply Co. v. Horn, 15 S.W.2d 492, 228 Ky. 554.

(2) Where realty sold to satisfy judgment does not bring two thirds of its appraised value, judgment debtor has right to redeem within one year from date of sale, and where the equity of redemption is sold, the debtor has right to redeem against the purchaser of the equity until the end of the year from the first sale.—Pinson v. Williams, 155 S.W.2d 869, 288 Ky. 314.

(3) Accordingly, where the equity of redemption was sold under execution about eleven months after the sale of the land to satisfy the judgment, the judgment debtor could not successfully contend that the delay in selling the equity of redemption did not improperly limit his right to redeem.—Pinson v. Williams, supra.

Levy of attachment after expiration of redemption period

ed by agreement of the parties, under rules considered supra § 253. Equity may, however, under certain circumstances give relief by allowing a redemption after the statutory time has elapsed, as shown infra § 261.

The time for redemption sometimes depends on whether the person seeking to redeem is the judgment debtor or his assignee,³² or a judgment or mortgage creditor of the debtor,³³ or a person seeking to redeem from one who has already redeemed.³⁴ The time of redemption under some statutes is affected by the receipt of rents or profits by the person from whom redemption is sought, demand by the person seeking redemption for a statement of rents or profits so received, and compliance or noncompliance with such demand.³⁵ Some statutes make the length of the period of redemption by the defendant owner depend on whether the real property sold has been abandoned or is not occupied in good faith,³⁶ but do not make such period depend on his ability or intention to redeem.³⁷

Some statutes give a subsequent judgment creditor or mortgagee a limited period after the expiration of the limitation on the judgment debtor's right to redeem, where the latter has not exercised such right, in which to redeem the property from the execution sale.³⁸

Method of computation. The period of redemption fixed by some statutes must be reckoned from the time when the property is stricken off by the officer.³⁹ Where land and, subsequently, the right or the equity of redemption are sold, the right to redeem is reckoned from the date of selling the land and not the equity, under some statutes.⁴⁰

As to exclusion of day of sale from computation of statutory period see the C.J.S. title Time § 13, also 62 C.J. p 1000 note 81; as to meaning of term "months" as used in statute see the C.J.S. title Time § 10, also 23 C.J. p 720 note 14, 62 C.J. p 96 note 69—p 970 note 76; and as to effect of last day of redemption period falling on a holiday see the C.J.S. title Time § 14, also 62 C.J. p 1002 note 17.

Statute authorizing extension of redemption period. Statutes authorizing the court to extend, within certain limitations, the period of redemption from certain sales on execution, which are enacted to meet an existing public emergency and which are limited as to time, relate to the public peace, health, and safety, and may be supported as an exercise of the police power of the state.⁴¹ on under attachment until after nine months from date of sale, in view of Code § 11776.—Pierce v. White, 216 N.W. 764, 204 Iowa 1116.

Redemption before confirmation of sale

Under some statutes right to redeem from the lien of a levy of execution on real estate may be exercised at any time before confirmation of the sale by a court having jurisdiction, and unless the right is exercised within that time it is lost.—Gosmunt v. Gloe, 76 N.W. 424, 55 Neb. 709.

Power of court or clerk to extend time

Neither the court nor the clerk may grant an extension of time, under some statutes.—Paulsen v. Hanson, Iowa, 216 N.W. 762—23 C.J. p 719 note 3 [e].

Extension of time on giving security

Under some statutes an extension of time may be allowed on the giving of security.—Thompson v. E. I. Dupont Co., 111 N.W. 302, 100 Minn. 367.

Time dependent on method adopted

(1) Where redemptioner proceeds under Rev. Codes 1921 § 9443, amount to be paid is merely matter of calculation, and must be tendered within one year, but, under § 9448, amount to be paid requires accounting, and tender is not necessary until amount is determined and period within which redemption may be made is extended, although demand for accounting must be made within one year.—Leonard v. Western, 241 P. 523, 74 Mont. 513.

(2) Under § 9448, the redemption is not completed until an accounting is had and the amount determined and paid or tendered within the time fixed.—Leonard v. Western, supra.

Redemption not premature

A judgment creditor's redemption of his debtor's property from execution sale, made by his delivering his execution and paying the redemption money to the sheriff at 12:15 A. M. of the first day on which he can redeem, is valid.—Paddock v. Staley, 58 P. 363, 13 Colo. App. 363.

duced, if the real property is abandoned or not occupied in good faith.—Docking v. Holley, 243 P. 286, 120 Kan. 344—Rosenfield v. Cunningham, 118 P. 878, 85 Kan. 835.

(2) In determining the question, court may consider failure of the owner to pay taxes or to keep the property insured, but failure to do either or both does not compel a finding of abandonment or lack of good faith which is necessary before court has power to shorten the period of redemption.—Rosenfield v. Cunningham, supra.

§ 258. Tender and Payment

- a. General considerations
- b. To whom payment to be made

a. General Considerations

There must be due compliance with provisions of the statutes as to tender, deposit of money, or payment.

The terms of the statutes as to the tender, deposit, or payment of money must be complied with in order successfully to assert the right to redeem.⁴² General rules as to the sufficiency of tender, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Tender §§ 6-44, also 62 C.J. p 660 note 77-p 680 note 15, apply.⁴³ Where the redemptioner has made due tender to the person authorized to receive the statutory amount, the latter's refusal to receive it for any reason does not invalidate the tender;⁴⁴ nor is the right to redeem forfeited by failure to make seasonable tender, when such tender is prevented by inability, after diligent effort, to find the purchaser or any person authorized to act in his behalf.⁴⁵ A fortiori is this true where the purchaser designedly prevents tender by leaving the state and remaining away until the redemption period has expired.⁴⁶ A delay in tendering the amount due to the alienee of the purchaser at execution sale is sufficiently accounted for by a showing that there was an attempt to redeem from the execution purchaser without notice of his prior alienation, and that such purchaser accepted the tender.⁴⁷

Payment to the officer is not necessarily impaired by giving notice to him not to pay over a portion of the money.⁴⁸

Amount. The party attempting to redeem must tender or pay the amount required by statute,⁴⁹ and the payment of a smaller sum than that fixed by the statute is fatal to the redemption proceedings,⁵⁰ except where the failure to pay the correct amount is caused by the mistake of the officer in computing the amount due,⁵¹ the debtor having acted in good faith and paid the additional sum due on demand.⁵² The right of a person who pays to the proper officer the amount required by statute is not defeated by the mistake of the officer in distributing the fund and in returning part to such person, where the latter does not ratify the mistake of the officer but immediately tenders payment of sufficient to restore the required amount.⁵³

A mistake as to this matter on the part of the person who seeks to redeem, which is one of law, does not afford ground for equitable relief, on the tender of an amount sufficient to cover the deficit.⁵⁴

Partial payments. An execution creditor is not required to accept partial payments, but he may

Claim of credit for rents or profits

(1) Under some statutes the person who seeks to redeem and who has received from the person from whom redemption is sought a statement of rents or profits received by the latter which are to be credited on the redemption money, may determine for himself the amount which is to be paid and tender the same, at his peril, or may tender or pay an amount governed or determined by such statement, with the right to accompany such tender or payment with a protest as to the amount thereof deemed excessive.—Reynolds v. Davis, 252 P. 386, 78 Mont. 56.

(2) Such protest does not nullify the effect of the tender.—Reynolds v. Davis, supra.

(3) While such protest does not take from the tender its voluntary character, it has the effect of notice to the officer receiving payment that the excess payment is not intended as a gift and constitutes such officer a bailee for the redemptioner of such excess payment.—Reynolds v. Davis, supra.

In New York

(1) In an early case, the fact that an insufficient payment was due to a mistake in which the officer participated was not regarded as an excuse, where the mistake was one of law.—Dickenson v. Gilliland, 1 Cow. 481.

(2) In a later case in which the short payment was due to a mistake of the officer, Dickenson v. Gilliland, supra, was followed, the court making no reference to the distinction between a mistake of law and a mistake of fact.—Ex parte Peru Iron Co., 7 Cow. 540.

(3) In a still later case payment of a sum less than that required by the statute was not regarded as fatal where such payment was induced by a mistake of fact on the part of the officer—Hall v. Fisher, 9 Barb. 17.

(4) In respect of a miscalculation by the officer which misleads the person who seeks to redeem, it has been said that there may be good reason for holding the redemption valid and effective.—Hall v. Fisher, 1 Barb.Ch. 53.

do so unless the statute forbids.⁵⁵ If partial payments are made but not completed before the expiration of the period for redemption, it has been held that the payor may recover back the amount paid,⁵⁶ although there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁷

Medium of payment. The tender or payment should be made in legal tender funds.⁵⁸ A payment by check may be refused.⁵⁹ Where, however, the purchaser agrees, a redemption may be made by the transfer of property or securities other than money.⁶⁰ On the theory that the officer authorized by statute to receive redemption money is either regarded as the agent of the purchaser or prior redemptioner or is required to account in money, it has been held or recognized that a payment by check or draft⁶¹ or bank bills⁶² or currency which is not legal tender⁶³ is effective if the officer accepts such payment. The redemption of land sold on execution by delivery of a check to the officer is not, however, necessarily conclusive under all circumstances; if dishonesty is shown, or the check dishonored, equitable remedies are available for the protection either of the officer or of the certificate holder.⁶⁴

cient where the tender is not refused on that ground.⁶⁵

b. To Whom Payment to Be Made

The officer who makes the sale, or the clerk of court, is a proper party to whom payment may be made under some statutes, as is the person from whom redemption is sought.

Under some statutes the officer conducting the sale, or his agent or personal representative, is a proper person to receive payment.⁶⁶ Under some of such statutes tender or payment may also be made to the execution purchaser or other person entitled to the redemption money.⁶⁷

Under various provisions the clerk of the court of the county in which the sale was made,⁶⁸ or in which the land lies,⁶⁹ or the clerk of the court from which execution issued,⁷⁰ or in which the judgment was rendered, if the purchaser does not reside in the county,⁷¹ has been regarded as one to whom payment may or must be made; but in the absence of any statutory provision authorizing such payment, payment to the clerk of the court is of no effect.⁷²

Under some statutes an officer who is authorized to receive payment is in a qualified sense the agent of the person from whom redemption is sought,⁷³

In Iowa

(1) Payment to the officer by check drawn by the attorney for the person seeking to redeem has been upheld.—Martin v. Dilley, 159 N.W. 594, 178 Iowa 41.

(2) If in good faith the redemptioner pays, and the officer receives, before the expiration of the time of redemption, an ordinary banker's check, and especially of a banker resident of the place where the business is transacted, upon which the money is realized when demanded, although after the expiration of the time, the same being ready for payment to the holder of the certificate promptly and without trouble to him, the payment has been regarded as sufficient.—Webb v. Watson, 18 Iowa 537.

Necessity for receipt of money on check

The view has been taken, however, that payment to the officer by check is not effective if money is not received for the check, but that such payment is sufficient if money is received for the check before the expiration of the time for redemption.—Hatcher v. Hackney, 20 Wend., N. Y., 602.

but he is not an agent in the sense that his receipt of the money necessarily constitutes an acceptance of it by such person,⁷⁴ and under some statutes the officer is regarded as an officer of the law with whom the redemption money may be deposited and not as an agent of the person entitled to receive the money.⁷⁵

Under some statutes, where the purchaser has parted with the certificate of purchase, payment should be made to his grantee or purchaser, if known to the redemptioner.⁷⁶ Where the redemption is from one who has already redeemed, he has been regarded as the purchaser to whom the payment should be made.⁷⁷

§ 259. Proceedings to Effect Redemption

- a. General considerations
- b. Notice
- c. Production of papers
- d. Receipt or certificate

a. General Considerations

The method or mode of redemption prescribed by statute must be pursued in order to effectuate a valid redemption.

The mode prescribed by statute must be pursued to make a valid redemption.⁷⁸ Even a court of equity has no power to prescribe a different mode.⁷⁹ This rule does not, however, deprive such a court of power to control the legal rights of creditor and redemptioner in cases of excusable mistake in bona fide attempts to exercise legal rights, or where the acts of the parties give rise to estoppel,⁸⁰ and, if compliance with the statute is prevented by the person from whom redemption is sought, equity will interfere to protect the rights of the person entitled to redeem.⁸¹

Due compliance with statutory requirements for redemption by one entitled to redeem usually will be treated as a completed redemption, and the right in this regard of the one so complying may not be defeated.⁸²

According to some authorities the taking of an assignment of a certificate of sale, although by a party entitled to redeem, is not a redemption of the property under the statute,⁸³ but according to others an assignment of the certificate of sale to one entitled to redeem operates as a redemption.⁸⁴ A purchase at execution sale does not amount to a statutory redemption.⁸⁵ Although the statute provides for a credit on the amount required to redeem from a purchaser in possession of the excess of the rents and profits over and above the expenses of operation, care, and insurance and for an accounting of such rents and profits on demand by the redemptioner for a sworn statement of the rents, profits, and expenditures, the right to redeem on paying the amount prescribed by statute does not depend on such demand.⁸⁶

Formal notice to the purchaser of an intention to exercise the right to redeem is not necessary in the absence of a statutory requirement.

Except where otherwise provided by statute,⁸⁷

Alternative methods

(1) If the statutes provide two methods by which the right to redeem may be exercised and the methods are substantially different, it has been held that the redemp-

tioner may not pursue both methods at the same time.—Leonard v. Western, 241 P. 523, 74 Mont. 513.

(2) An attempt to redeem, under Rev.Codes 1921 § 9443, by making a deposit of the amount necessary to redeem under that section was nullified by making a demand for an accounting which may be done only under § 9448.—Leonard v. Western, supra.

Definite form

Purpose of redemption statute is to reduce method of redemption from execution to definite form.—Paulsen v. Hanson, Iowa, 216 N.W. 762.

Right of judgment debtor to effect purchase of certificate

Instead of paying, and thus rendering the certificate of sale null and void and extinguishing the power of the officer to convey, the judgment debtor, having still the title, may, if he chooses, advance the money to a third person to enable the latter to purchase and take an assignment of the certificate and thus keep it in force.—Rankin v. Arndt, 44 Barb., N.Y., 251.

86. Wash.—Gray v. C. A. Harris & Son, 93 P.2d 385, 200 Wash. 181.

87. In Washington, the provision of Remington Code § 599, for five days' written notice to the sheriff of intention to redeem, and for notification by the sheriff to the purchaser or redemptioner of the sheriff's receipt of such notice, has been given a liberal construction in favor of

if the statute directs that the payment of the redemption money be made to the officer conducting the sale, no formal notice need be given to the purchaser, and the payment of the money and the filing of the papers required by statute are sufficient.⁸⁸

The receipt of a redeeming creditor filed with the clerk, without notice to the debtor, must contain on its face sufficient to operate as notice in law that the credit is given to the debtor, and to enable him to redeem; otherwise the redemption will be void.⁸⁹

There must be due compliance with statutory provisions requiring the production of written proof or showing as to designated matters, in the absence of an effective waiver.

There must be due compliance by the person who seeks to redeem with provisions of statutes requiring the production and tender by such person of specified proofs of certain requisite facts.⁹⁰ Some statutes of this general type are not applicable where the redemption is by the execution debtor.⁹¹

Where the statutes so require a judgment creditor who seeks to redeem shall present a copy of the docket of the judgment under which he seeks to redeem,⁹² and the statutes sometimes require him to deliver a satisfaction of his judgment in whole or for a specified amount.⁹³ An affidavit of the amount due on the judgment⁹⁴ or mortgage⁹⁵ under which a redemption is sought is required by some statutes. An affidavit of assignment of the judgment or mortgage which is relied on as a basis for redemption is sometimes required.⁹⁶

Waiver. The production of the statutory proofs,⁹⁷ or the insufficiency thereof,⁹⁸ may be waived by the purchaser or one claiming under him; but they cannot be waived by the officer conducting the sale.⁹⁹ By statute in some states there can be no waiver of these requirements as against a person entitled subsequently to redeem.¹

d. Receipt or Certificate

The certificate of redemption provided for by some statutes may properly be claimed only where there has been due performance of statutory conditions precedent.

In order to entitle a person who seeks to redeem to the certificate of redemption provided for by some statutes, there must be due compliance by him with conditions precedent to the right to rethe person who seeks to redeem.—State v. Shattuck, 163 P. 414, 95 Wash. 119—23 C.J. p 722 note 56 [a].

In Minnesota

(1) It has been held that the holder of a subsequent judgment could redeem the premises from an execution sale by paying the proper amount to the proper officer, without producing certified copies of the judgment docket, files, and records; it was sufficient if the clerk had knowledge thereof, and the originals were called to his attention.—Hunter v. Mauseau, 97 N.W. 651, 91 Minn. 124.

(2) It was also held that, in view of the effect given by statute to the sheriff's certificate of execution sale, it was sufficient for a judgment creditor who sought to redeem to produce the sheriff's certificate of sale under such creditor's judgment, without producing certified copies of the judgment, docket thereof, and execution on which such sale was made.—Ritchie v. Ege, 59 N.W. 1020, 58 Minn. 291.

93. In New York

(1) Provisions of Civ.Prac.Act §§ 728, 741, requiring judgment creditor who seeks to redeem to deliver certificate of satisfaction of his judgment, in whole or for a specified amount, must be strictly followed.—Application of Burdickoff, 296 N.Y.S. 609, 251 App.Div. 826.

(2) Where senior judgment creditor, attempting to redeem property sold pursuant to judgment of junior judgment creditor, failed to deliver to sheriff such certificate, senior judgment creditor was not entitled to redeem.—Application of Burdickoff, supra.

(3) Failure to deliver the required certificate of satisfaction at time the creditor attempts to exercise right to redeem is fatal defect which renders redemption ineffective and cannot be cured by delivering satisfaction after another creditor has exercised right of redemption.—Application of Burdickoff, supra.

Right to waive denied

The right of the purchaser to waive the requirements as against a person entitled subsequently to redeem was denied in a case in which the court did not refer to any statutory prohibition.—People v. Ransom, 2 N.Y. 490, affirming 4 Den. 145.

deem imposed by statute.² The receipt of certificate of the officer conducting the sale is sufficient evidence of the payment of the redemption money, and establishes a complete redemption of the property from the sale under the execution.³ A redemption made by payment to the person from whom redemption is made is not invalidated by the fact that the certificate is made by the sheriff.⁴

Failure of one in actual and open possession of the property, who has redeemed as remote grantee of the debtor, to have executed and recorded a certificate of redemption, as required by statute, does not render the redemption ineffective so as to permit a judgment creditor of the debtor subsequently to redeem, since such possession is notice to such creditor of the rights and claims of the redemptioner.⁵ Such a certificate need not be made and recorded in order to protect the rights of the redemptioner, in the absence of statutory requirement in that regard.⁶

§ 260. Defects, Objections, and Waiver or Estoppel

As a general rule only defects in substance affect the validity of a redemption; the right to question the validity of a redemption may be lost by waiver or estoppel and objections may be made only by persons whose rights are affected.

As a general rule the validity of the redemption is not affected by defects unless they are defects in substance,⁷ and cannot be collaterally attacked in a proceeding in which neither the execution debtor nor the owner of the land is a party.⁸

As between the immediate parties to the redemption, the statutory requirements for a redemption may be dispensed with by agreement under rules set forth supra § 253, or may be waived by the acts or conduct of the purchaser.⁹ In the absence of any rights acquired by third persons,¹⁰ an execution creditor may waive the time of redemption.¹¹ So, it seems, an interested party by his conduct may estop himself from objecting to a reasonable extension of time in which to redeem,¹² and the purchaser may waive, or be estopped to rely on, the provision of an agreement fixing the period for redemption, so as to permit redemption after the expiration of such period.¹³

The execution purchaser may be estopped by the conduct of his attorney from asserting that the payment by the redeeming judgment creditor was to the wrong officer so as to make the redemption ineffectual.¹⁴

The purchaser may by his conduct waive defects in an attempted tender made by the execution debtor looking to the right to redeem and estop himself to claim that no tender was made.¹⁵ The person from whom redemption is sought, by denying the right of another to redeem and by refusing to furnish to such other a statement of indebtedness, is estopped from relying on such other's failure

2. Redemption by judgment creditor

A judgment creditor is not entitled to a certificate of redemption where he has not delivered a certificate of satisfaction of his judgment in whole or for a specified amount, as required by statute.—Application of Burdickoff, 296 N.Y.S. 609, 251 App. Div. 826.

Receipt as certificate

A sheriff's receipt stating all the facts necessary to show a redemption, although not formally stated to be a certificate, was in substance a certificate within a statute directing the officer making a sale of lands under execution to execute to the person making a redemption a certificate stating all facts transpiring before him sufficient to show the fact of such redemption, and as such it was evidence of the facts stated in it under the statute.—Livingston v. Matters constituting waiver or estoppel

Where execution creditor bid off property under agreement to hold for debtor's benefit and permit him to redeem before a certain date, it was held that right was not automatically forfeited by failure to redeem within that time, that creditor waived right to terminate debtor's equitable estate by accepting rent or interest paid thereafter under belief that right still existed, and that creditor was estopped by acceptance of so-called rent, which was in reality interest.—Broadwell v. Maxwell, supra.

to tender the amount due.¹⁶ Demand by the person from whom redemption is sought of an amount in excess of that to which he is entitled constitutes a waiver in a court of equity of requirements as to tender.¹⁷

Some statutes render void and ineffective, as against a subsequent redeeming creditor, an attempted waiver of statutory requirements for redemption.¹⁸

Acceptance of money. The legality of a redemption cannot ordinarily be questioned by the purchaser or other interested person where he has accepted the redemption money,¹⁹ either on the ground that the party redeeming had no authority to redeem,²⁰ or that the redemption was after the statutory period therefor²¹ or was premature,²² or that the amount paid was too small.²³

Acceptance of money by the officer is not necessarily such an acceptance by the purchaser as will estop him to refuse to accept it.²⁴ So the acceptance of the money by the purchaser is not an estoppel against the debtor.²⁵

It has been held that the acceptance of a partial payment by the purchaser at an execution sale prior to the expiration of the statutory period of redemption, operates as a waiver of the right to the sheriff's deed,²⁶ particularly where accompanied by an agreement to give further time for the payment of the residue,²⁷ and that the execution debtor will be allowed to redeem after the expiration of the statutory period.²⁸

Who may object. Third persons cannot urge objections,²⁹ nor can a defect or irregularity in redemption proceedings be urged by the debtor or one claiming under him, where neither of them sought to redeem during the statutory period.³⁰

Under some statutes, the purchaser of real property at execution sale is entitled, as owner, to protect his interest by contesting the claimed right of another to redeem,³¹ and whether the assignee of a junior judgment is entitled to redeem is a question which concerns only such assignee and the purchaser.³² A purchaser at an execution sale is entitled to question the right of one attempting to redeem and to ask that an attempted redemption be set aside as a cloud on his title where those entitled to redeem have failed to do so.³³

signee of the judgment debtor to redeem, on the ground that the original judgment creditors would be entitled to levy on and resell the property for the purpose of collecting a balance due, where the rights of such grantee are fully protected and such judgment creditors are not parties to the proceeding to redeem.³⁴

A prior redemptioner who has effected a valid redemption has such an estate as entitles him to protection against an assumed junior redemption under a void mortgage. He may maintain an action to determine the invalidity of the judgment and judgment lien claimed to support a junior redemption, and to determine that the holder thereof is not a redemptioner.³⁵

a. General Considerations

Courts of equity will enforce a statutory right to redeem in a proper case, even, under some circumstances, after the statutory time to redeem has elapsed.

A statutory right of redemption may be enforced through a bill in equity, seasonably brought, in instances where the exercise of the right in conformity with the statutory requirements is wrongfully denied, obstructed, or prevented, or where, before the right can be properly exercised, it is necessary to determine by judicial proceedings in whom the right rests, from whom the redemption must be made, or the amount requisite to effect it.³⁶ It has been held, however, that a bill does not lie to keep a question of redemption open until a judgment of the court can be had removing all embarrassments and clouds from the title of property held for redemption.³⁷ A bill which is so framed as to call for redemption, and the setting aside of interfering obstructions on equitable grounds, even though it contains allegations appropriate to a statutory proceeding to quiet title, presents a case which falls under the inherent jurisdiction of a court of equity, and needs no statutory aid.³⁸

Where a tender of the amount required to redeem is refused, a suit in equity may be brought to compel the allowance of a redemption,³⁹ except, it seems, where a statutory proceeding is provided for this purpose, which the person who seeks to redeem has neglected, without sufficient cause, to pursue,⁴⁰ and even then such statutory remedy may not preclude the right to proceed in equity.⁴¹ Relief may be obtained in equity by the holder of a mere equitable title, where a tender by him is refused, although he is not in possession.⁴²

A purchaser at execution sale does not acquire title adverse to defendant in execution who offers to redeem on compliance with a statute giving the right, so as to defeat the jurisdiction of a court of equity to determine such defendant's right to redeem under the statute.⁴³

A suit does not lie until there has been either a full performance by plaintiff of all the statutory requirements, or a valid and sufficient excuse for nonperformance without any fault or neglect on the part of such plaintiff.⁴⁴

Some statutes provide a remedy for the recovery of possession by the person entitled to redeem where the purchaser in possession of the property improperly refuses to permit redemption.⁴⁵

After lapse of statutory time. Courts of equity may, on a proper showing of fraud, mistake, or other circumstances appealing to the discretion of the court, relieve debtors from a failure to redeem within the statutory period and permit a redemption thereafter.⁴⁶ For instance, equity may permit redemption after the statutory period where the land was sold at a grossly inadequate price and the transaction is also affected by other facts showing or indicating unfairness,⁴⁷ even though the rights of third persons have intervened, where they are chargeable with notice of the circumstances of the sale.⁴⁸ Likewise, it is a ground for relief that the execution debtor was mentally infirm, so as to be incapable of looking after his interests, in connection with gross inadequacy of price.⁴⁹

Equity will not interfere, however, merely to relieve the debtor from hardship,⁵⁰ nor unless there is some good ground therefor,⁵¹ especially where complainant has not acted in good faith.⁵² Mere inadequacy of price is not of itself sufficient ground for relief,⁵³ nor is the sickness of the debtor and his inability to attend to business during the redemption period.⁵⁴ A party is not entitled to redemption after the expiration of the statutory period, merely on the ground that he had no actual notice of the sale or that he was mistaken as to the time when the right of redemption expired.⁵⁵

any act of the party claiming that right, such as a suit to redeem or the like, without a showing of additional facts,⁵⁶ in a proceeding in a court of equity it has been stated that it is the duty of courts to see that parties are not deprived of the right to redeem given by statute because of delays which are the result of proceedings in court to determine questions affecting such right.⁵⁷ So it has been held that, where the validity of the judgment and sale is questioned, a court of equity may extend the time for redemption until the determination of the questions thus raised.⁵⁸ Where the setting aside of an execution sale was reversed on appeal after the statutory period for redemption had elapsed, it was held that the lower court has authority to give the debtor a reasonable time to redeem.⁵⁹

b. Tender and Payment into Court

Usually where suit to redeem is brought, tender is necessary in the absence of an excuse.

When a suit to redeem is brought, a tender is necessary,⁶⁰ unless there are facts excusing the failure to make tender.⁶¹

If the bill fails to show that payment or tender

Policy in state

In a proceeding in equity it has been stated that, where the rights of innocent third persons are not involved, the policy in Illinois is to permit judgment debtor to redeem on equitable terms, even though the period of redemption has expired, where provisions of the law have not been complied with and judgment creditor would otherwise gain a benefit to which he is not entitled.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Lyons, 20 N.E.2d 784, 371 Ill. 341.

Inducing delay in making redemption

Equity will permit redemption after the statutory period where the land was sold at a grossly inadequate price and the debtor was unfairly induced by the purchaser to delay making redemption.

U.S.—Graffam v. Burgess, Mass., 6 S.Ct. 686, 117 U.S. 180, 29 L.Ed. 839, affirming, C.C., 10 F. 216.

Invalid execution

Where execution based on joint judgment was issued against only one party defendant, and land was sold for a grossly inadequate price to purchaser who probably knew of processes of law with relation to execution sales, but who kept still until period of redemption had expired, redemption was allowed in equity after expiration of period therefor.—Block v. Hooper, 149 N.E. 21, 318 Ill. 182.

Irregularities

Where land has sold for an inadequate price, irregularities will be seized on to permit the judgment debtor to redeem.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Lyons, 20 N.E.2d 784, 371 Ill. 341.

Facts constituting excuse

(1) Where one against whom redemption is sought, without suit, claims more than allowed, person entitled to redeem may proceed in equity to effectuate accounting and redemption under law without tender.—Hopson v. Eller, 114 So. 52, 216 Ala. 556.

(2) Where purchaser at execution sale failed to furnish itemized statement of debt and lawful charges on demand, person entitled to redeem could enforce right of redemption was made before such pleading was filed, according to some cases a tender made therein is not sufficient to authorize a judgment or decree for redemption, unless, in connection with such offer, the pleading show a valid and sufficient excuse for the omission to make such tender before the action was brought.⁶² The view has been taken, however, that it is not in all cases necessary to bring the redemption money into court,⁶³ and a tender in the bill of such an amount as may be due in redemption has been regarded as the equivalent of the bid of the amount paid by a prior redemptioner, where the bill is filed within the period for redemption prescribed by statute.⁶⁴ It has been held, however, that, where tender has been made and refused, plaintiff should tender the redemption money in the bill and, at least, should always be ready to pay the money into court when ordered so to do.⁶⁵

Payment into court is not necessary, where a tender has been refused, if plaintiff is ready and willing to do so when ordered.⁶⁶

Tender is not required before suit for an account to determine the amount necessary to redeem, where the amount is in dispute and defendant had refused to furnish a statement of indebtedness on demand by plaintiff.⁶⁷

c. Time to Sue and Laches

A suit to redeem will be barred by laches in the absence of a sufficient excuse for the delay, or by failure to bring the suit within the time prescribed by statute.

Laches will bar the right to enforce redemption by suit or action,⁶⁸ in the absence of a sufficient excuse for the delay.⁶⁹ Failure to bring the suit within the time prescribed by statute will operate as a bar.⁷⁰

d. Parties

Whether or not a particular person has a present interest in the property involved or in the litigation is usually to be considered in determining whether he is a proper or necessary party.

Where a judgment creditor assigns his judgment, he cannot sue to redeem.⁷¹ Where the execution debtor has tendered the redemption money to the purchaser within the redemption period, a purchaser from such debtor may maintain a bill to redeem without making such debtor a party;⁷² and, where property has been redeemed from the execution purchaser, such purchaser is not a necessary party to a suit by his redemptioner to enforce the right of redemption against a subsequent redemptioner.⁷³ A purchaser of land under an execution sale, who has received from the debtor his redemption money, and released to him his right in the land, is not a necessary party to a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the same property, to a judgment creditor, by the sheriff.⁷⁴

An assignee of a judgment is a necessary party in a suit by the assignor.⁷⁵ The heirs of the purchaser are necessary defendants, where he died intestate,⁷⁶ and so are subsequent purchasers from the execution purchaser.⁷⁷

e. Pleading and Proof

The complaint or bill in an action to enforce a statutory right to redeem should contain allegations showing an attempt to exercise the right in the manner prescribed by the statute, and the existence of all other facts which constitute essentials of such right.

The complaint or bill should allege an attempt to exercise the right of redemption in the usual statutory mode.⁷⁸ A bill to redeem which does not without tender.—Gay v. Taylor, 108 So. 853, 214 Ala. 659.

(3) That a purchaser at execution sale conveyed portions of the land by several conveyances has been held a sufficient excuse for the failure of the redemptioner from the sale to pay or tender the purchaser or his vendee the amount required to effectuate redemption, the purchaser having put it beyond redemptioner's power to redeem out of court as provided by statute.—Snow v. Montezano Land Co., 89 So. 719, 206 Ala. 310.

allege either performance on the part of complainant of all that the statute requires of him or excuse for nonperformance, and which does not couple such excuse with an offer in the bill to perform all that the statute requires, contains no equity.⁷⁹ Thus, under a statute giving the judgment debtor the right to redeem only on condition that possession of the land was delivered to the purchaser within a stipulated period after the sale without suit, a bill to enforce the right of redemption which fails to allege the fulfillment of such condition precedent is fatally defective,⁸⁰ unless the bill alleges facts constituting an excuse for non-compliance with such condition.⁸¹ The production of the papers required by statute on applying to redeem must be alleged.⁸² The bill is subject to demurrer if it fails to show that the person who seeks to redeem is one of a class to which the statute gives the right.⁸³

A bill to enforce a right to redeem conferred by some statutes should allege tender prior to the bringing of suit or a sufficient excuse for failure to make such tender;⁸⁴ and, according to some cases, the bill should usually contain an averment of readiness, or an offer, to pay.⁸⁵ In pleading tender it must be alleged that the amount tendered included all lawful charges of which plaintiff had notice.⁸⁶ In some jurisdictions an averment of tender must state that the money is paid into court.⁸⁷

A complaint to establish a right of redemption over another redemptioner by showing that the judgment under which the latter redeemed is void need not allege that there was a defense to such judgment on the merits.⁸⁸ In a suit to set aside a prior redemption by a judgment creditor on the ground that his debtor had no title, estate, right, or interest in the property and to permit the present plaintiff to redeem, an allegation in the complaint that such debtor has no title in the property whatsoever is sufficient to negative record title in him notwithstanding there is no specific mention of record title.⁸⁹

A bill for redemption may be framed with a double aspect with a prayer in the alternative.⁹⁰

Complaint in an action brought pursuant to statute by the execution debtor to compel the purchaser in possession to account for rents as a preliminary to redemption is not subject to demurrer merely because it appears on the face of the complaint that defendant purchaser claims the right to withhold information demanded by plaintiff, in accordance with the statute, prior to suit.⁹¹

Bill subject to demurrer

A bill which does not contain such allegation is subject to demurrer.—Etheredge v. Etheredge, 148 So. 114, 226 Ala. 618, followed in Etheredge v. Wood, 148 So. 115, 226 Ala. 619, and Etheredge v. Etheredge, 148 So. 912, 227 Ala. 694—Snow v. Montesano Land Co., 89 So. 719, 206 Ala. 310.

Excuse for failure to make tender not shown

(1) In an action by the judgment debtor to compel the purchaser in possession to account for rents and profits, in which plaintiff also demanded that the sheriff be compelled to accept the amount which should be found due and necessary to redeem

the property, there was no basis for requiring such acceptance where the complaint contained no allegation as to tender, it appeared that the purchaser had, prior to suit, actually furnished the judgment debtor with a statement of rents and profits, pursuant to demand made by the latter under the statute, and there were no allegations in the complaint showing that compliance with the redemption statute was prevented by defendant purchaser.—Reynolds v. Davis, 252 P. 386, 78 Mont. 56.

(2) A bill to redeem which merely alleged a written demand by complainant for a statement in writing of the amount of the debt and lawful charges claimed for redemption and that the same was not furnished within ten days as per Code § 10144, did not show an excuse for failure to make tender, averment solely of the facts set out in the statute not being sufficient; the bill should show that an occasion for the demand existed, that the amount required to redeem is unknown to complainant, and that it is not reasonably ascertainable without the aid of a court of equity.—Etheredge v. Etheredge, 148 So. 114, 226 Ala. 618, followed in Etheredge v. Wood, 148 So. 115, 226 Ala. 619, and Etheredge v. Etheredge, 148 So. 912, 227 Ala. 694.

It has been held, in a case in which tender before suit was alleged, that an offer to pay the money tendered should have been made in the bill.—Perry v. Carr, supra.

Allegation sufficient

Allegation in bill that complainant is ready and willing to pay the purchase price and lawful charges when the same can be ascertained by the court is sufficient under Code § 10147.—Gay v. Taylor, 108 So. 553, 214 Ala. 659.

tender by decedent or his heirs.⁹² An answer denying that plaintiff is a junior lienholder as alleged and also the payment of the redemption money as alleged is not demurrable.⁹³

Proof. In a suit to enforce a statutory right to redeem, there must be due proof of the matters alleged in the bill, on which such right depends.⁹⁴

f. Evidence

Rules of evidence applicable in civil actions generally apply in an action to enforce a right to redeem.

In accordance with general rules, see Evidence § 104, the burden of proof is on complainant to establish the material allegations made by him.⁹⁵

The rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence which obtain in civil actions generally, see Evidence §§ 1016-1025, apply.⁹⁶ A record entry of redemption, although made at the proper time and by the proper officer, is not conclusive evidence of such redemption.⁹⁷ It may be shown that the entry is a forgery or otherwise fraudulent.⁹⁸

g. Relief and Decree

In a suit in equity to enforce or establish a right to redeem the court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, impose proper conditions on the grant of relief, and determine and enforce the rights of the various parties.

In a suit in equity to enforce the right to redeem, the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may impose on its grant of relief such conditions as the justice of the case requires.⁹⁹ The decree may award restitution on making the payments fixed by it,¹ and, where this cannot be done, may order the return of the money paid in attempting to redeem, with interest;² but plaintiff who has paid part of the redemption money, on being allowed to recover back the amount paid, cannot recover interest thereon, where he had been in possession since the execution sale.³

Under a statute authorizing a judgment debtor to redeem the interest in his land which may have been sold under execution, a decree that the purchaser shall convey the land by a quitclaim deed is erroneous, since he may have acquired some other interest than that which passed at the sale.⁴ Under a bill, based on such a statute, the court is not authorized to determine conflicting titles, and put the judgment debtor in a better condition than he occupied when his land was sold under execution.⁵

The decree should fix the time within which the redemption is to take place.⁶ In a suit for an accounting and for determination of the amount necessary for plaintiff to pay in order to redeem real property, it is proper for the court to make provision for an extension of the statutory period of redemption for a reasonable time after the conclusion of the litigation.⁷

Decree for conveyance to judgment debtor not authorized

In a suit in which the judgment debtor sought a conveyance from the alleged purchaser, in which the bill alleged a tender of costs, fees, and expenses of the judgment creditor and offered to pay into court such items and the amount of execution, plaintiff was not entitled to a decree requiring conveyance by the alleged purchaser, where no valid execution sale had been made before the suit was brought, but the proper relief was a decree declaring the alleged sale void and enjoining the judgment creditor from enforcing his execution if plaintiff should pay the judgment creditor's judgment, costs, and expenses, and, in the event of non-compliance with such conditions, permitting the judgment creditor to enforce his execution.—Niedwiski v. Belasco, 142 A. 228, 49 R.I. 417.

h. Costs and Allowances

The award of costs is generally a matter within the discretion of the court.

Costs are generally in the discretion of the court,⁹ and the amount, if any, should, it has been said, be stated in the decree.¹⁰

It is not only proper for the decree to provide that the costs to which defendant is entitled must be deposited with the clerk for the use of defendant,¹¹ but it should also provide that, if the amount specified is not deposited within the time specified, the bill should be dismissed with costs.¹²

In a suit in equity to redeem the court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, impose as a condition of relief to plaintiff the requirement that he shall pay to defendant a reasonable solicitor's fee incurred by defendant.¹³

Thyfault, supra.

In California

(1) Under Code Civ.Proc. § 703, if the judgment debtor redeems, the effect of the sale is terminated, and, "judgment debtor," as used in such statute, has been construed to include "successor in interest" of the judgment debtor.—Bateman v. Kellogg, 211 P. 46, 59 Cal.App. 464.

(2) In an earlier case in the supreme court, however, in which redemption from a mortgage foreclosure sale was involved, but in which §§ 702, 703 of such Code were construed, the court did not regard a grantee of the judgment debtor as within the term "judgment debtor."—Simpson v. Castle, 52 Cal. 644.

(1) A redemption from an execution sale by a judgment creditor does not vacate the sale.—Roose v. Gove, 77 P. 246, 32 Colo. 522.

(2) Redemption from execution sale of church property by an assignee of a judgment creditor and receipt of a sheriff's deed by such assignee did not make execution sale void and cause revival of lien of present plaintiff's judgment to extent of amount unpaid thereon, where such judgment was against trustees of church and not the church, and litigation between present plaintiff and trustees was terminated in favor of trustees after stipulation was

Generally redemption by the debtor, his successor in interest, or the owner vacates or destroys the effect of the execution sale, although the rule is otherwise where another than the foregoing redeems; redemption terminates the purchaser's title or interest in the property.

As a general rule redemption by the judgment or execution debtor or his successor in interest vacates, annuls, or destroys the effect of, the sale as such,¹⁴ and a like rule applies in some jurisdictions where a person who owns a part of an entire tract of land, or has some interest therein, redeems the entire tract.¹⁵ On the other hand, redemption by other persons does not generally vacate, or interfere with the ultimate effect of, the sale as such,¹⁶ and, as a general rule, such redemption succeeds to the rights and interests of the purchaser at the execution sale, as shown infra § 263 b. Generally the redemption terminates the estate, title, or interest of the purchaser as such in the property sold,¹⁷ where the redemption is either entered into to the effect that decree of court would resolve all matters between trustees and lienholder.—Zawojski v. Mederer, 21 N.Y.S.2d 466, affirmed 21 N.Y.S.2d 399, 259 App. Div. 1035.

Holder of lien on part of land sold Redemption of the whole tract sold on execution by a creditor who has a lien on part only of such tract does not annul the sale.—Powers v. Sherry, 132 N.W. 210, 115 Minn. 290.

17. Ala.—Morris v. Beebe, 54 Ala. 300.

Absolute title in purchaser

The rule applies even where the title of the purchaser is absolute until redemption.—Morris v. Beebe, supra.

Purchase by execution creditor

Where real property sold under execution had been purchased by the execution creditor, the purchase price being an amount equal to the balance due on the judgment debt, and there had been a redemption from such sale by one who had received a deed of the property in a foreclosure procedure, it was held, in an action by the execution creditor to recover possession from one in possession under the grantee in such deed, that the execution creditor was not entitled to possession, nor could he recover rents and profits for the period intermediate the issuance of the certificate of sale to him and the redemption, in view of the fact that such creditor had recovered the full amount due on his judgment.—Ziller v. Brower, 6 Alaska 134.

by the execution or judgment debtor,¹⁸ or by a creditor of such debtor.¹⁹

Where the officer making the sale has accepted payment, he has no further legal or equitable interest in the property sold.²⁰ A deed made by such officer to the execution purchaser, or one claiming under him, after the statutory redemption thereof, passes no rights.²¹

If the statute which authorizes the sale and gives the redemption right likewise declares the effect of the sale and allowance of the right, that effect, and it alone, may be allowed.²²

*Returning the redemption money, after once accepting it, does not affect the redemption.*²³

Right to, and control over, redemption money. A judgment creditor who has redeemed property from an execution sale, generally speaking, has no further interest in, or control over, the redemption money.²⁴ The holder of the certificate of sale and not the assignee of the judgment on which the execution sale is based is entitled to the redemption money.²⁵

It has been held that, where the execution creditor has redeemed from the sale at which he himself had purchased, the execution debtor is entitled to the benefit of the amount bid by the execution creditor at a subsequent sale pursuant to such creditor's redemption.²⁶

§ 263. — Interest Acquired

- a. Redemption by debtor, his successor in interest, or owner
- b. Redemption by one other than debtor, his successor in interest, or owner

a. Redemption by Debtor, His Successor in Interest, or Owner

As a general rule redemption by the debtor or his successor in interest releases the title of the debtor or successor in interest from the consequences of the execution sale but restores the original liens; under some statutes redemption by the debtor's successor in interest does not restore the original liens.

The general rule is that a redemption by the execution debtor or his successor in interest destroys the effect of the sale as such, extinguishing the rights of the purchaser, as stated supra § 262, and that such redemption releases the title of the execution debtor,²⁷ or of his successor in interest,²⁸ from the consequences of the sale, but that, by such redemption, the original liens are restored,²⁹ and the

Where execution creditor purchased debtor's realty on sale under execution on its two judgments, redeemed from execution sale, and purchased at sale pursuant to its own redemption, it was held that the execution debtor was entitled to benefit of amount bid by execution creditor at sale following redemption, in satisfaction of his debts, where sale by subsequent judgment creditor, who had also redeemed from execution sale, resulted in bid only of redemption money, and debtor obtained no credit thereby on any debt.—*Crowder v. Absolute title in purchaser

Where, under the applicable statute or practice, the purchaser holds absolute title until redemption, under some statutes redemption by the judgment debtor reinvests the latter with the title, and he is in the estate as of his original estate, as was a grantor entering at common law for breach of condition, and as though there had been no execution sale and conveyance to the purchaser.—Morris v. Beebe, 54 Ala. 300.

Payment accruing to benefit of debtor

Under some statutes payment of the redemption money by another than the execution debtor has been regarded as a payment for the execution debtor as owner, and reverts title in him so that it cannot be divested by any action of the execution purchaser and the person making the payment, done without the knowledge or consent of the debtor.—McMillan v. Bagby, 83 S.W. 610, 26 Ky.L. 1265.

Judgment under which sale made

In a case in which a grantee of the judgment debtor redeemed, it was stated that during the period for redemption the rights of the judgment creditor were suspended and that, on redemption, the judgment was restored as a lien, subject to the amount received from the sale, and with all its former force.—People ex rel. Hunter v. Seery, 200 N.Y.S. 531, 206 App.Div. 19.

Junior lien

(1) Where a sale is made under several executions issued under different judgments and no benefit is received from such sale by the holder of a junior of such judgments, redemption by the judgment creditor restores the holder of such junior judgment to the same position he would have been in if the sale were

property may be sold again for any balance remaining unpaid on the judgment under which the sale was made³⁰ or may be applied to the satisfaction of other liens on the property existing prior to such sale.³¹ Under the construction given some statutes, however, a different rule applies where the grantee or assignee of the judgment debtor redeems, and such grantee or assignee takes the property free and clear of the judgment under which the execution sale was made, notwithstanding there was a deficiency on such sale,³² and also free and clear of a lien junior to that of the judgment under which the sale was made, where the holder of the junior lien failed to exercise his right to redeem within the prescribed time.³³ Under some statutes which have so been construed, however, a different rule not made under such holder's execution.—Bodine v. Moore, 18 N.Y. 347.

(2) In a case in which an assignee of the judgment debtor redeemed and in which the right to sell under a junior judgment was denied in view of the construction given to the applicable statute, it was said that, in the case of a statute which merely authorizes the sale of real estate and gives a right of redemption from the sale, without prescribing the effect of the sale and allowance of the right, it is altogether likely that the consequence of the exercise of the right would only be to free the land from the prior judgment or other lien on which it was sold, and thus give place to subsequent liens.—Case v. Cherokee Lanyon Spelter Co., 61 P. 406, 62 Kan. 69.

Redemption by widow of judgment debtor

In a case in which the widow of the owner of property sold on execution redeemed, it was held that she was not entitled to protection as an innocent purchaser without notice, and that she took title with infirmities resulting from prior acts of herself and her husband.—Lamar v. Lincoln Reserve Life Ins. Co., 131 So. 223, 222 Ala. 60.

In Idaho the view has been taken that redemption by the assignee or successor in interest of the judgment debtor did not give a new title but merely restored to the judgment debtor or to his successor in interest the title of the judgment debtor, freed of the encumbrance of the liens foreclosed but subject to all other liens, including the liens of judgments inferior to the lien of the judgment under which the execution sale was made.—*Evans v. Redemption by "owner"

Word "owner," as used in a statute providing that lands sold under a judgment when redeemed by the "owner" shall be subject to resale to pay an amount remaining unpaid on such judgment, means any owner of the real estate whose interest is subject to payment of the judgment, without regard to whether or not he is the judgment debtor, or claims under him.—Lemmon v. Osborn, 54 N.E. 1058, 153 Ind. 172.

Agreement for redemption and no change of possession

Where an execution purchaser takes title under an agreement with the judgment debtor that the latter may redeem, and there is no change of possession, and afterward another judgment for another debt is rendered against the judgment debtor, and while that judgment is outstanding the contract of redemption is partly executed and the purchaser, at the instance of the judgment debtor, conveys a portion of the property to a third person by absolute deed, and there is still no change of possession, the property embraced in such deed is prima facie subject to levy and sale under the junior judgment.—Christie v. Whaley, 3 S.E. 896, 79 Ga. 188.

32. Ark.—Rose v. Loughborough, 32 S.W.2d 1066, 182 Ark. 782—Arkansas Nat. Bank v. Price, 15 S.W.2d 396, 179 Ark. 259.

In Alaska, under Alaska statute, execution sale of property of lessor to satisfy specific liens against it exhausted such liens, and after redemption of property by lessee of the owner it was not subject to resale to satisfy same demands.—Dikeman v. Jewel Gold Mining Co., C.C.A. Alaska, 13 F.2d 118.

In California

(1) In a case which actually involved redemption from a mortgage foreclosure sale, but which involved the construction of Code Civ.Proc. §§ 702, 703, the view was taken that a grantee who redeems takes the title free from a lien for a deficiency.—Simpson v. Castle, 52 Cal. 644—23 C.J. p 728 note 78 [a].

(2) In a comparatively recent case, however, the view has been expressed that "judgment debtor" as used in § 703 of such Code is to be construed to include "successor in interest" of the judgment debtor.—Bateman v. Kellogg, 211 P. 46, 59 Cal. 464.

In Illinois

(1) In a comparatively early case it was held that, where a person recovered two judgments against the same defendant at the same term of court and executions on the judgments were issued the same day but execution was levied, and the property was sold to the judgment creditor under the smaller judgment, it was permissible for such creditor to have execution levied, and the property sold, under the larger judgment after the grantee of the execution debtor under a deed given after the first sale had redeemed from such sale.—Davenport v. Karnes, 70 Ill. 465.

(2) In a case arising under Hurd Rev.St.1919 c 77 § 18, it was held that, where the holder of the judgment under which an execution sale was made purchased at the sale for less than the amount of the judgment, the grantee of the execution debtor, on redeeming, took the property free and clear of the lien of such judgment and that the judgment creditor was not entitled to have the property levied on and sold under an alias execution for the amount of the deficiency.—Easter v. Holcomb, 221 Ill.App. 485.

In Iowa the rule stated in the text applies.—Paulsen v. Jensen, 228 N.W. 357, 360, 209 Iowa 453, quoting Corpus Juris—Danforth v. Linsey, 160 N.W. 318, 178 Iowa 834—23 C.J. p 728 note 78 [c] (2).

In Montana it has been held, under applicable statutes, that, where real estate is sold under execution and bid in by the judgment creditor for less than the amount of his judgment, the judgment debtor may transfer the interest remaining in him, during the period of redemption, to a third person, who, on redemption within the statutory time, acquires the legal title free from the lien of a deficiency judgment theretofore entered.—McQueeny v. Toomey, 92 P. 561, 36 Mont. 282, 122 Am.S.R. 358, 13 Ann.Cas. 316.

33. In Iowa

(1) The rule stated in the text applies, and the grantee, on redeeming, takes property free of junior judgment lien, where junior judgment lienholder failed to redeem.—

obtains where the judgment debtor redeems, and, after redemption by him, the property is subject to a lien for the deficiency on the sale,³⁴ and also to the lien of a judgment junior to the one under which the sale was made.³⁵

It has been held that the rule that, after redemption by the judgment debtor, the property may be sold again to satisfy a deficiency on the first sale does not apply in case of a judgment against a non-resident based on substituted process and attachment, that is, a judgment quasi in rem, since the lien of the attachment terminates on the first sale and there is no lien by virtue of the judgment alone,³⁶ but the rule permitting a resale for the deficiency has been applied where the judgment was based on such process and attachment in a case in which a remote grantee of the judgment debtor redeemed.³⁷

It has been held that redemption of the whole tract by a person who owns only a part of such tract, or who has an interest therein, gives him a lien in the nature of an equitable mortgage on the part not owned by him for the amount necessarily paid to redeem, if the original lien was, as to him, equitably chargeable on that part of the tract,³⁸ but that the rule is otherwise as to an equitable pro rata share of the amount, which he was compelled to pay to protect his own share.³⁹ Under some statutes redemption by the grantee of the judgment debtor extends only to the undivided fractional interest in the property involved which was owned by the judgment debtor at the time of the execution sale and which was acquired by the purchaser at such sale, notwithstanding the whole of such property is subsequently allotted to such debtor in a partition proceeding and is included in the conveyance to the grantee.⁴⁰

If the execution debtor sold the land before the execution sale but after the judgment lien attached, a redemption by him will inure to the benefit of his purchaser,⁴¹ and, where a purchaser at a prior execution sale acquired title as against the execution debtor but not against the latter's creditors because of such purchaser's failure to record his deed under such sale, redemption by such debtor from a subsequent execution sale of the same property inures to the benefit of the successors in interest of such purchaser.⁴² Where there is an execution sale of lands and thereafter of the equity of redemption, a redemption from the first sale by the execution debtor inures to the benefit of the purchasers at the second sale.⁴³

It has been held that a legal tender within the time prescribed by law, of the amount for which an equity of redemption is sold under execution, is sufficient to revest the equity of redemption in the execution debtor without a deed of conveyance from the purchaser,⁴⁴ but, under some statutes, mere tender or payment does not revest the execution debtor with legal title to the land.⁴⁵

Where property has been sold by an execution purchaser to a bona fide purchaser, after the same has been redeemed by the owner, but before the redemption has been recorded, the owner may reach Paulsen v. Jensen, 228 N.W. 357, 209 Iowa 453, overruling People's Savings Bank v. McCarthy, 93 N.W. 583, 119 Iowa 586.

(2) Provision in deed by judgment debtor that it was subject to liens of record did not have the effect of reattaching junior judgment lien after grantee redeemed from execution sale to satisfy senior judgment.—Paulsen v. Jensen, 228 N.W. 357, 209 Iowa 453.

(3) In some earlier cases effect was given to a junior lien notwithstanding the grantee of the judgment debtor redeemed.—Byers v. McEniry, 91 N.W. 797, 117 Iowa 499—Curtis v. Millard, 14 Iowa 128, 81 Am.D. 460—23 C.J. p 728 note 78 [c] (3), (4).

In Kansas, in a case in which the assignee of the judgment debtor redeemed, it was held that, under the applicable statute, land once sold and redeemed cannot again be sold in satisfaction of any inferior judgment or lien under which the holder was allowed a right of redemption, contingent on the non-exercise of the same right by the preferred classes of persons therein mentioned.—Case v. Cherokee Lanyon Spelter Co., 61 P. 406, 62 Kan. 69—23 C.J. p 727 note 74 [b].

the proceeds of the sale in the hands of the execution purchaser.⁴⁶

b. Redemption by One Other than Debtor, His Successor in Interest, or Owner

As a general rule a redemptioner other than the debtor, his successor in interest, or the owner steps into the shoes of the purchaser at execution sale and succeeds to the right, title, or interest acquired by such purchaser at the sale.

Usually a redemptioner, other than the execution debtor, his successor in interest, or the owner, merely steps into the shoes of the execution purchaser,⁴⁷ and succeeds to whatever right, title, or interest the purchaser acquired at the sale,⁴⁸ as fully, it has been said, as if the redemptioner had purchased the certificate of sale.⁴⁹ A sheriff's deed passes the same title as it would pass to the purchaser, if executed to him without redemption.⁵⁰

If the execution creditor was the purchaser, the redemptioner does not acquire any interest in the judgment debt or security therefor.⁵¹

If a creditor who has two judgments proceeds to sell on one, and within the same year sells the same property on the other, under some statutes a judgment creditor who redeems from the first sale will hold the property as against the second sale.⁵²

It has been held that a redemption by a mortgagee whose mortgage is junior to the judgment under which the execution sale was made inures to the benefit of one to whom the mortgagee has assigned the mortgage as security for a debt.⁵³

A redemption by a judgment creditor which restores the property to the judgment debtor does not cause any title which thus came back to the debtor to pass under a prior intermediate second sale.⁵⁴

Revival, discharge, or satisfaction of liens, judgments, or claims. Under some statutes redemption by a judgment creditor from a sale on execution on a prior judgment effects a revival of such creditor's judgment lien.⁵⁵ It has been held, however, that redemption by a judgment creditor or other lienholder may, under some circumstances, effect a satisfaction or payment of his judgment or lien.⁵⁶ It has been held that a literal or absolute compliance by the holder of a junior judgment, who redeems, with a statutory provision that his lien and claim will be extinguished, unless within a specified time he enters in the sale book the amount he is willing to credit on his claim, is not required in order to prevent the complete discharge of his judgment.⁵⁷

(2) Where the redemptioner is a lienholder but his lien extends to only a part of the land sold, it has been held that, where he redeems the whole thereof, he is subrogated to the rights of the purchaser at such sale.—Powers v. Sherry, 132 N.W. 210, 115 Minn. 290.

In Minnesota redemption by a mortgagee extinguished and paid his mortgage debt to the amount of the value of the land less the amount which he paid to redeem.—White v. Leeds Importing Co., 75 N.W. 595, 761, 72 Minn. 352, 71 Am.S.R. 488.

In New York

(1) In a case in which the rights of the parties were governed by the statutes in force before the enactment of the code of civil procedure, it was held that, where land redeemed by a senior judgment creditor was of greater value than the amount paid to redeem and the amount due on such senior judgment, the judgment of such judgment creditor must be considered satisfied.—Benton v. Hatch, 25 N.E. 486, 122 N.Y. 322, affirming 43 Hun 142.

(2) In an earlier case, however, it was held that redemption by a senior judgment creditor from sale under execution on a junior judgment did not constitute a satisfaction of the senior judgment creditor's judgment where he acquired only a nominal title by virtue of his redemption, and that he might redeem again under the same judgment from a sale of the property under a judgment senior to his own and the one from which he first redeemed.—Ex p. Peru Iron Co., 7 Cow. 540.

(3) It was also held that redemption by a junior judgment creditor from a sale under a senior judgment did not constitute a satisfaction of the junior judgment.—Van Horne v. McLaren, 8 Paige 285, 35 Am.D. 685.

(4) The view was also taken that such redemption by a junior judgment creditor was no bar to an action at law to enforce the payment of his judgment.—Emmet v. Bradstreet, 20 Wend. 50—Van Horne v. McLaren, 8 Paige 285, 35 Am.D. 685.

57. Construction of statute and sufficiency of compliance

(1) A statement filed by the redeeming creditor which indicated

Under some statutes the right or title acquired by redemption by a judgment creditor from a sale under execution on a judgment senior to his judgment is subject to liens which are prior to that of such senior judgment.⁵⁸ On the other hand, since the sale of property on execution destroys all liens subsequent to the one under which it is sold, a judgment creditor redeeming property from an execution sale takes title discharged from all liens prior to his but subsequent to the one under which the sale was made, whether such liens are by judgment or otherwise.⁵⁹

Redemption by virtue of voidable or void judgment. A judgment creditor who redeems from a prior sale acquires a valid title to the premises redeemed, even though the judgment, by virtue of which he acquired the right to redeem, may be subsequently reversed for irregularity or error,⁶⁰ but, if the judgment under which redemption is attempted is void, the attempt amounts to nothing and confers no right or interest on the person attempting redemption.⁶¹ It has been held, however, that if a judgment creditor whose judgment is unauthorized and void redeems land of the judgment debtor from sale under a prior valid judgment, with the consent of the purchaser, and receives a deed therefore, he obtains a good title thereto,⁶² and a like rule has been recognized where the purchaser at execution sale receives the amount of the claim from the holder of the void judgment and transfers to such holder all rights acquired under such sale.⁶³

with sufficient certainty the amount for which he was willing to give credit on his judgment was sufficient under the statute described in the text, the statute not prescribing the form.—Craig v. Alcorn, 46 Iowa 560.

(2) It was held that there was sufficient compliance with the statute where, within the time prescribed, the judgment creditor filed with the clerk of court who issued the execution a statement of the amount he proposed to allow as the value of the land, the balance, after deducting the amount of the sale from which he redeemed, to be credited on his own judgment, and the judgment debtor had knowledge, within the prescribed time, of the existence of such statement in the files of the clerk, notwithstanding the statement was not actually entered in the sale book until after the prescribed time.—Craig v. Alcorn, supra.

(3) The duty of actually entering the statement in the sale book was that of the clerk, and his failure to perform such duty did not deprive the redeeming creditor of his rights, in the absence of prejudice to the other person.—Craig v. Alcorn, supra.

(4) Immaterial alteration of the statement after entry in the sale book and of the record did not vitiate the proceeding.—Craig v. Alcorn, supra.

Voidable or void execution sale or judgment under which sale made. A lienholder who redeems is generally entitled to the rights of a purchaser and the mere fact that the judgment under which the same was made, or the sale itself, was voidable does not impair his rights in this regard.⁶⁴ Where, however, the judgment on which the execution issues is void, an attempted redemption from a sale thereunder is a nullity and confers no title on the person who seeks to redeem.⁶⁵

§ 264. — Right to Deed

A person who has complied with statutory requirements for redemption may be entitled to a deed of the property either from the proper officer or from the purchaser at execution sale if the latter has himself received a deed.

Where the redemptioner has fulfilled all the statutory requirements necessary to effect a redemption, he may be entitled to a deed to the property from the proper officer;⁶⁶ or, in case the purchaser has already received a conveyance from the sheriff, then the redemptioner is entitled to a conveyance from the purchaser, and may proceed by a bill in equity to enforce his rights,⁶⁷ notwithstanding the statute gives him a summary remedy to recover the possession after he has acquired the legal title.⁶⁸

Rights of person who has lost right to redeem

A mortgagee who has duly redeemed from an execution sale has been regarded as a bona fide purchaser for value, notwithstanding he is charged with notice of a defect in the notice of sale and with notice of the inadequacy of the sales price, and one who has lost his prior right of redemption cannot have the sale set aside, although he offers to refund the money paid to redeem which was much less than the value of the property.—*White v. for the purpose of redemption may not be recovered back.

As a general rule, payment of the amount necessary to redeem by a party so entitled is regarded as purely voluntary, so that such money is not recoverable back.⁶⁹ Such payment waives all defects in the proceedings and is not recoverable back on account of them.⁷⁰ So, where an attempted redemption for the purported purpose of protecting the redemptioner's interest is wholly unnecessary, the right to recover back the money paid has been denied because of the voluntary character of the payment.⁷¹ The view has been taken, however, that money paid into court on an attempted redemption by a person who sought to redeem as grantee of the debtor should be returned to such person if the deed to him is void as to creditors and he, therefore, has no interest in the property or power to redeem.⁷²

Where one who knows that the title of the judgment debtor is defective redeems, he cannot recover the money paid by him on the ground of mistake of fact on its subsequently appearing that the debtor's title was invalid.⁷³ Where, however, an execution sale is made under a void judgment, and the property is redeemed by one ignorant of the facts, he may recover back the money.⁷⁴

X. CONVEYANCE TO PURCHASER

§ 266. Necessity of Deed or Bill of Sale

The general rule is that a conveyance from the sheriff is necessary to perfect the legal title of the purchaser of real estate at an execution sale; but a bill of sale is not needed to vest title in personalty.

While there is authority that the purchaser of realty at an execution sale acquires legal title by operation of law,⁷⁵ it has been held that, in the absence of a deed from the sheriff, the purchaser has only an equitable title;⁷⁶ and a conveyance from the sheriff is commonly regarded as necessary in order to perfect the title of the purchaser of real estate,⁷⁷ after the termination of the statutory period within which the land could have been redeemed;⁷⁸ the sheriff's certificate of sale is not sufficient for that purpose.⁷⁹ A sale not consummated by a transfer of the property is, however, valid until set aside in proceedings therefor;⁸⁰ and when the sheriff has made, at the same time, several sales to one purchaser on several executions in favor of the same creditor and against the same debtor, but one deed is necessary to complete the proceedings.⁸¹ If the deed is lost before registration, the officer should execute a new deed.⁸² The lapse of many years without a deed having been taken by the purchaser authorizes the conclusion that he and those claiming under him abandoned all claim to the premises.⁸³

In the case of personal property, the general rule is that the title vests in the purchaser by virtue of the levy and sale without any bill of sale.⁸⁴

§ 267. — Presumption of Execution

After the lapse of many years from the date of an execution sale, it will be presumed that the sheriff made a deed to the purchaser, at least where it is shown that the purchaser went into possession under the sale and continued in possession.

§ 268. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

Constitutional and statutory provisions relating to the conveyance to the purchaser of property sold at an execution sale are discussed in connection with their specific subject matter infra §§ 269-283.

§ 269. Authority to Make

- a. In general
- b. After expiration of term of office
- c. Successor in office

a. In General

The officer conducting an execution sale, or his deputy, is generally the proper person to execute the conveyance of the property.

The general rule is that the officer conducting an execution sale is the proper person to execute the conveyance of the property,⁸⁷ provided he is not interested in the judgment under which the sale was had,⁸⁸ and provided there is a subsisting power in him at the time of the conveyance.⁸⁹ There is no presumption, however, of the official right of a sheriff to make a valid deed of real estate; but such right must be shown in each instance by the record of the proceedings which resulted in the deed.⁹⁰ A sheriff cannot execute a deed to land outside of his county.⁹¹

A deed may be executed by a deputy,⁹² whether he conducted the sale or not.⁹³ If the sale is made by a deputy, the deed may be made by the sheriff.⁹⁴

b. After Expiration of Term of Office

Even after the expiration of his term of office, the officer who conducted the sale, or his deputy, may execute a conveyance of the property, in the absence of statute to the contrary.

In the absence of statute to the contrary,⁹⁵ the officer conducting the sale may execute a conveyance even after the expiration of his term of office;⁹⁶ and the fact that the sheriff is not in possession of, and has no control over, his official books, papers, documents, and records, and has no present recollection of the sale made by him, is no excuse for his refusal to execute a deed.⁹⁷ In case of the death of such officer prior to the execution of a deed, the proper remedy for the purchaser is to apply to the court for the appointment of a commissioner or master to execute a conveyance,⁹⁸ or to sue to obtain a decree divesting the title of the execution debtor.⁹⁹

A deputy may execute a deed after the expiration of the term of office of his principal,¹ provided his authority is made to appear.²

c. Successor in Office

Under some statutes the deed to property sold under execution may be made by the successor in office of the sheriff who made the sale.

In many jurisdictions, by statutory provision, the deed may be executed by the successor in office of the sheriff who made the sale,³ even though he is not the immediate successor.⁴ Under some statutes it may be executed by either the officer making the sale or his successor in office;⁵ or by the successor only when the officer who conducted the sale is unavailable or disqualified.⁶

Such statutory power is special and limited,⁷ and must be exercised under the restrictions imposed.⁸ An order of court has frequently been required in such a case.⁹

§ 270. Time for Making

In the absence of statute providing otherwise, a sheriff's deed cannot be executed and delivered before the redemption period has elapsed or, in some jurisdictions, after the termination of a reasonable or prescribed time following the expiration of such period.

Unless otherwise provided by statute,¹⁰ the deed cannot be executed and delivered until after the expiration of the time limited by statute for redemption;¹¹ if executed prior thereto, even on the last day of the redemption period,¹² it is void¹³ unless the error is corrected.¹⁴ After the right to a deed has accrued, however, it may, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, be executed at any time,¹⁵ on demand.¹⁶ In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that a motion to require the sheriff to execute a conveyance should be made within a reasonable time after the expiration of the redemption period, and that laches on the part of the party entitled will bar his right to a deed;¹⁷ and, under some statutes, the deed cannot be executed after the expiration of a prescribed period of time from the date on which the period of redemption terminates.¹⁸

§ 271. Right to Conveyance

The purchaser of realty at an execution sale is the person primarily entitled to the deed, but may ordinarily demand it only after paying or tendering the purchase price. In proper circumstances, the deed may be executed to the purchaser's heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, or to third persons designated by him.

The purchaser of realty at an execution sale is not entitled to a deed until he has paid,¹⁹ or tendered,²⁰ the purchase price, unless the creditor grants the purchaser time within which to pay his bid, and so informs the sheriff;²¹ and where the execution is satisfied before the bid is paid the purchaser is not in a position to insist on a deed.²² Where all requirements have been complied with, the purchaser is entitled to demand that the sheriff make a deed to him for the property,²³ notwithstanding he has a perfect title through other conveyances,²⁴ provided the sale was a valid one,²⁵ and provided there has been no waiver of the right.²⁶

The purchaser of realty at an execution sale is the person primarily entitled to the deed,²⁷ and the deed cannot be made to one of several purchasers with-

Foreclosure redemptioner

Execution debtors' judgment creditor who had redeemed premises from foreclosure sale was not estopped to demand sheriff's deeds forthwith under statute making such redemption a bid at execution sale and allowing no other redemption where there is no greater bid, notwithstanding premises were struck off to creditor under conditional bids at execution sale, where those bids were made to protect creditor's interest after sheriff accepted another's con-

out authority from the others.²⁸ By due assignment of the certificate of purchase, or proper directions by the purchaser, the sheriff is authorized, and may be compelled, to execute the deed to a designated third person.²⁹ Whether the conveyance should be made to the purchaser or to his assignee concerns only those parties.³⁰ A deed made to an entire stranger to the record, without authority, is a nullity.³¹ Where a sheriff's deed was made to the parties who furnished the money, and not to the purchaser named in the return to an execution sale, and was acquiesced in for nearly fifty years, the presumption is that it was so done by the appointment of the purchaser.³²

After death of party entitled. A deed made to the party entitled after his death is of no force,³³ although the fact that it is void does not affect the title of those claiming under him.³⁴ In such a case the deed should, at the instance of the executor or administrator, be made to the heirs or devisees of the party so entitled,³⁵ or to his legal representatives.³⁶

After death of judgment debtor. Where a sale is had and approved, and a deed ordered, and before its execution the judgment debtor dies, it is not necessary to revive proceedings in the name of the heirs or legal representatives of the deceased before the deed is executed.³⁷

A purchaser of personal property at an execution sale is, under at least one statute, entitled to a certificate of sale transferring to him all of the interest of the debtor in the property as of the date of the levy of the execution.³⁸

§ 272. — Proceedings to Compel

pel the officer to execute a deed, may resort to mandamus or an application in the original action by motion, or may seek the assistance of a court of equity.

If the officer neglects or refuses without good cause to execute an execution deed at the proper time, the purchaser has a remedy by mandamus to compel its execution, as is shown in the C.J.S. title Mandamus § 97, also 38 C.J. p 639 note 30—p 640 note 32. The purchaser may also seek the assistance of a court of equity,³⁹ or he may proceed by an application in the original action by motion;⁴⁰ and it has been held that the only proper remedy is by a motion in the cause and not by distinct action.⁴¹

In a proceeding to compel a sheriff to deliver a deed, questions of fact are for the determination of the trial court.⁴²

§ 273. Restraining Making or Delivery

Where sufficient ground exists, a court of equity has discretion to grant an injunction restraining the sheriff from executing an execution deed.

Where sufficient ground exists to prevent the completion of a sale by the execution of a deed by the sheriff, it is within the discretion of a court of equity to grant an injunction restraining the sheriff from executing it;⁴³ thus the delivery may be enjoined where the sale was made contrary to the explicit directions of the execution plaintiff.⁴⁴ In order to warrant such relief it must be made to appear that the judgment and decree are void, or that the proceedings of the sheriff thereunder are so defective as to render the alleged sale invalid,⁴⁵ and the party seeking such relief must show such right, title, or interest as entitles him to do it.⁴⁶ Where part of the premises are alleged to be exempt as a homestead, the execution of a deed for the balance will not be enjoined.⁴⁷

A judge has no power to order the sheriff not to execute a deed unless the property brings a price fixed.⁴⁸

Pleading. A plaintiff seeking to enjoin the execution of a deed must allege facts showing that in an action of ejectment founded on the deed he would be required to offer evidence to overcome the effect of the deed.⁴⁹

§ 274. Who May Object to Issuance

After the expiration of the redemption period, the judgment debtor is not entitled to raise objections to the execution of a deed.

After the sale and the expiration of the redemption period, the judgment debtor has no such interest in the land as will entitle him to raise objections to the completion of the execution sale by the execution of the deed, he then occupying the position of a mere stranger.⁵⁰ A junior purchaser who has not redeemed cannot insist, as against the execution debtor and the purchaser at a prior sale, that the right of such prior purchaser to a deed from the sheriff had been lost.⁵¹ It has been held, however, that the execution debtor may show the deed to be void, because executed to one who was not the purchaser or his representative and who had no right.⁵²

§ 275. Execution and Delivery

- a. Execution generally
- b. Acknowledgment
- c. Delivery

a. Execution Generally

Statutes governing the execution of deeds to property sold under execution must be complied with. The deed should be executed by the sheriff or by a deputy in his name, and must purport to be his official act.

Statutes governing the execution of deeds to property sold under execution must be complied with.⁵³

The deed must purport to be the official act of the sheriff⁵⁴ and, where so required by statute, must be signed by attesting witnesses.⁵⁵ Some statutes require as a condition precedent to the execution of the deed that the proceedings be examined and approved by the court and an order obtained directing the deed to be made;⁵⁶ but the failure to indorse the approval on the deed does not render the deed ineffective.⁵⁷

The deed should be executed by the sheriff, or, where executed by a deputy, it must be in the name of the sheriff;⁵⁸ but a bill of sale of property sold by a judge acting as sheriff is good, although he refers to himself therein as sheriff instead of judge.⁵⁹

Seal. The deed has been required to be sealed,⁶⁰ but the mere absence of a seal, without proof that it was omitted at the time of execution, is no ground for the exclusion of the deed as evidence.⁶¹ The circumstances may be such as to give rise to a presumption that a seal was attached;⁶² but such a presumption is not justified in the face of an express admission that the deed was not sealed.⁶³

introduction of other evidence to show the execution of the deed.⁶⁶ The statute may require that after the deed is acknowledged the clerk shall make an entry of the acknowledgment on the records of the court.⁶⁷

A deed properly acknowledged is good evidence without the production of the record entry,⁶⁸ and a defective entry will not invalidate the acknowledgment.⁶⁹ A defective certificate of acknowledgment cannot be aided by reference to the record entry,⁷⁰ nor can the absence of a certificate be so cured.⁷¹ Reference may, however, be properly made to the language of the conveyance itself.⁷²

(2) Before and by Whom

A sheriff's deed may be required to be acknowledged in open court, before the clerk of the court from which execution issued, or in the county where the land lies. The deed must be acknowledged by the officer signing it.

Some statutes require sheriffs' deeds to be acknowledged in open court,⁷³ or before the clerk of the court from which the execution issued,⁷⁴ or in the county where the land lies.⁷⁵ The deed must be acknowledged by the officer signing it,⁷⁶ although his term of office may have expired between the execution and the acknowledgment.⁷⁷

Where a deputy has executed the deed in the name of his principal, he should also acknowledge it;⁷⁸ but he must do this in the name of his principal,⁷⁹ and not in his own name.⁸⁰ An acknowledgment made by a deputy after the death of his principal is void.⁸¹

(3) Sufficiency and Effect

Substantial compliance with the statute as to the certificate of acknowledgment is sufficient. The acknowledgment has been held to cure all irregularities not rendering the sale and proceedings prior thereto void ab initio.

A substantial compliance with the statute as to the certificate of acknowledgment is sufficient.⁸² The acknowledgment has been held to cure all irregularities⁸³ which do not render the sale and proceedings prior thereto void ab initio,⁸⁴ so that nothing but fraud in the sale or a want of authority to sell can defeat the title.⁸⁵

In a jurisdiction where acknowledgment is necessary to the validity of a deed, even a defectively acknowledged deed, evidence to show that a party holding under it is not a mere intruder, but holds under color of title.⁸⁶

(4) Time

Where the statute does not designate the time for acknowledging a sheriff's deed, it may be acknowledged after suit brought, whether the sale was before, or after his term of office has expired, but it cannot be acknowledged before the return day of the writ.

Where the statute does not designate the time within which a sheriff's deed must be acknowledged, it may be acknowledged after the suit in which it is offered in evidence has been brought, if the sale was before,⁸⁷ or after a subsequent sale to another person and acknowledgment of the deed,⁸⁸ or after the sheriff's term of office has expired.⁸⁹ The acknowledgment cannot, however, be made before the return day of the writ.⁹⁰

Delivery is essential to the validity of a sheriff's deed; but delay in delivery does not affect its validity. Delivery may be made anywhere, as the parties find convenient.

Compliance must be had with statutes governing the delivery of a deed executed by a sheriff to property sold under execution.⁹¹

It is essential to the validity of a sheriff's deed that there be a delivery thereof,⁹² and it is immaterial that the deed was executed prematurely if not delivered prematurely.⁹³ Delay in delivering the deed does not affect its validity.⁹⁴

The delivery of the deed is a mere ministerial act, which may be done anywhere, as may suit the convenience of the parties.⁹⁵ It has been held that delivery should not be made pending a motion to set aside the sale.⁹⁶

If the deed is put in escrow, no title passes until the conditions are performed.⁹⁷

Presumption of delivery. Where a deed has been executed, acknowledged, and recorded, no formal delivery is necessary; the law presumes a delivery under such circumstances.⁹⁸

The delivery of a bill of sale is a delivery of the thing sold.⁹⁹

§ 276. Form and Contents

- a. In general
- b. Effect of omission or misrecital

a. In General

Statutes prescribing the facts to be recited in a sheriff's deed must be complied with; in the absence of statutory requirements, an intention to pass title must appear. Recitals as to the judgment, execution, and sale are frequently required.

Compliance must be had with statutes prescribing

what facts are to be recited in a sheriff's deed.¹ In the absence of statute, while no particular form of words is required in a sheriff's deed to pass the title, it must appear from the language employed that such was the intention, and it must contain apt and proper words of grant, release, or conveyance.² There is authority that the deed must conform to the judgment in every essential particular.³

It has been held that a deed is valid if it recites facts sufficient to show that the officer had authority to sell;⁴ and, although there is authority that it need not state the judgment on which it is predicated,⁵ it appears that it would be well for a sheriff to recite in his deed both the judgment and execution under which he acted.⁶ The deed is frequently required to recite the judgment, its date, the names of the parties, the amount thereof, and the court rendering it;⁷ the execution, levy, and date thereof;⁸ the time and place of sale;⁹ notice of sale;¹⁰ and the name of the purchaser.¹¹ Matters required to be recited in the return to the execution are not therefore necessary recitals in the sheriff's deed.¹²

b. Effect of Omission or Misrecital

The validity of a sheriff's deed is not affected by the omission or misrecital of matters which are not necessary to show his authority to sell; but the omission of essential recitals is fatal.

The omission or misrecital of facts not required by statute to be stated does not render a sheriff's deed invalid.¹³ On the other hand, the omission of essential recitals required by statute is fatal;¹⁴ but,

Sufficiency

A sheriff's deed, which was executed after an execution sale of land, could not be attacked on ground that deed showed that land was not properly advertised for sale and that sale was made to highest and best bidder, where deed recited that land was sold at public auction at the courthouse door after advertising according to law, and that, after giving tenants in possession thirty days' written notice of time and place of sale, the land was offered for sale at public outcry and sold to a certain buyer.—Williams v. in so far as statutes require recitals beyond those necessary to show the authority of the officer to sell, they are merely directory, and an omission or misrecital of such matters will not affect the validity of the deed.¹⁵

The deed is not fatally defective because of a misrecital of, or an omission to recite, the levy,¹⁶ the date of the levy,¹⁷ the sale, and proceedings had thereunder,¹⁸ the issuance and return of a justice's court execution where the property was sold under an execution issued on a transcript of the judgment,¹⁹ the parties to the execution, where the parties to the judgment are named,²⁰ the name of the execution creditor²¹ or debtor,²² the exact day when judgment was rendered,²³ the date of the execution,²⁴ the amount of the judgment,²⁵ the court which issued execution,²⁶ the reasons why the sale was not made at the first term of court,²⁷ or the fact that the executions recited were issued on the judgments recited.²⁸ If necessary, the deed may be aided as to such omissions by the return.²⁹ Even a misrecital of, or an omission to recite, the judgment or execution is not fatal unless identification thereof is impossible.³⁰

If a fatal defect appears from the sheriff's deed, and is not explained, the deed is void and confers no title.³¹ After possession thereunder for a number of years, a deed will not be held defective if,

from a reasonable construction of the language of the recitals, it can be inferred that the sheriff performed the requisite acts.³²

When the deed varies from the return, the former must prevail.³³

§ 277. — Description of Property

Realty conveyed by a sheriff's deed must be so described that it may be accurately identified; but the description may be aided by reference to other instruments or by evidence aliunde. A deed purporting to convey property other than that ordered sold by the writ is void; but, where the identity of the land is certain, a variance between the description in the deed and that in the levy, return, or certificate of sale is immaterial.

Where a sheriff's deed is necessary to pass the title to real property, the premises must be properly described therein,³⁴ although it has been held that the purchaser takes an equitable title where the description is incorrect.³⁵ A description is sufficient if the property conveyed is capable of being accurately identified therefrom;³⁶ but a deed not describing the property with such precision that it can be reduced to a certainty is insufficient.³⁷ What would be a certain description in a voluntary conveyance is necessarily certain in a sheriff's deed.³⁸

It is not necessary that the description of land be contained in the body of the deed;³⁹ it may be sufficient if it refers, for identification, to some other instrument or document.⁴⁰ Where, however, the property cannot be identified by reference to the papers or records, the deed is void for uncertainty.⁴¹

Even where vague and uncertain, the description may be aided by evidence aliunde identifying the premises,⁴² or showing that, in the community where the sale took place, the land was known by the description given.⁴³ An inherently insufficient description, however, cannot be helped out by evidence of facts tending to show what property the officer probably intended to sell.⁴⁴ If the description of the property in the deed is equally applicable to two or more tracts of land, and there is nothing in the officer's return under the writ from which the particular tract to which the description refers can be ascertained, the deed is void for uncertainty.⁴⁵ Failure to state that the land sold was situated in the county is not a fatal defect,⁴⁶ where the deed recites that the levy was made by the sheriff of a certain county, and the sale was made therein.⁴⁷

Variance. A sheriff's deed purporting to convey property other than that ordered to be sold by the writ is void and conveys no title.⁴⁸ The sheriff cannot cure defects in the description of the land in the prior proceedings by accurately describing it in his deed.⁴⁹ Where the identity of the land is certain, a variance between the description in the deed and that in the levy or return is immaterial⁵⁰ and may be explained by parol.⁵¹

sale does not affect the title,⁵² and the fact that a deed purports to convey more than was sold does not invalidate it as to the actual interest sold.⁵³

In the case of personal property, a defective description thereof in the bill of sale is immaterial,⁵⁴ since, as shown supra § 266, title vests in the purchaser by virtue of the levy and sale.

§ 278. Recording and Registration

Unless a sheriff's deed is recorded or registered in the time and manner prescribed by statute, it is void as to subsequent bona fide purchasers or encumbrancers; but, except where statutes make recording necessary to pass legal title, an unrecorded deed is operative as against the execution defendant, his heirs or devisees, and purchasers with notice.

Purchasers at execution sales are entitled, to the same extent as purchasers at private sales, to the benefit of registry and recording acts;⁵⁵ and where such deeds are not recorded or registered within the time required by the statute,⁵⁶ or are defectively recorded,⁵⁷ they are void as to subsequent bona fide purchasers or encumbrancers. Where there are no intermediate conveyances, however, the failure of the execution purchaser to record his deed within the time required by statute will not invalidate his title,⁵⁸ and as against the execution defendant, his heirs or devisees, and purchasers with notice, the sheriff's deed is operative even where it is not recorded,⁵⁹ or where it is defectively recorded,⁶⁰ except that in some jurisdictions, by statute, an unrecorded deed passes merely the equitable title,

§ 279. Amendment, Reformation, or Cancellation

- a. Amendment; reformation
- b. Cancellation

a. Amendment; Reformation

Where a sheriff's deed is defective, the sheriff, or his successor in office, may make another deed, and may be compelled to do so.

Where a sheriff's deed is defective, he has the right to make another deed,⁶⁴ and he may be compelled to do so;⁶⁵ or the court, in a proper proceeding, may grant relief.⁶⁶ An obvious and palpable mistake, which a court would correct of course on motion, needs no correction and may be disregarded.⁶⁷

The sheriff may exercise this power after the expiration of his term of office,⁶⁸ but not after the expiration of the prescribed time within which a deed must be made.⁶⁹ The sheriff's successor may also, in a proper case, execute a new deed.⁷⁰

though intended to have been sold.⁷¹ An intervening purchaser from the judgment debtor acquires no title, since the deed, so far as the purchaser is concerned, relates back to the execution sale.⁷²

The power of a court of equity to reform a sheriff's deed is considered in the C.J.S. title Reformation of Instruments § 12, also 53 C.J. p 916 note 32-p 917 note 40.

b. Cancellation

Equity may cancel a sheriff's deed where it was made under fraudulent or other unconscionable circumstances.

In the absence of statute, a sheriff's deed cannot be set aside on motion, unless there was no judgment or execution, or the court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment;⁷³ but equity may, on proper and sufficient grounds, cancel such a deed.⁷⁴ While mere inadequacy of consideration is not, of itself, ground for setting aside a sheriff's deed,⁷⁵ cancellation may be had where the deed was made under circumstances which were inequitable or unconscionable,⁷⁶ as, for example, where the price paid at the execution sale was shockingly low,⁷⁷ or where there was fraud⁷⁸ or other irregularity⁷⁹ in the proceedings, in which irregularity the party seeking relief did not participate.⁸⁰

The deed may be canceled as to part and maintained as to the balance.⁸¹

§ 280. Construction and Operation

- a. Operation and effect in general
- b. Construction

a. Operation and Effect in General

A sheriff's deed is generally admissible in evidence to prove title to the property described therein, and is prima facie evidence of a valid execution sale. Holdings conflict as to whether such a deed is subject to collateral attack.

Compliance must be had with statutes governing the operation and effect of sheriff's deeds.⁸⁶ It has been held that, after the acknowledgment and delivery of such a deed, the title of the vendee can be defeated only by a showing of fraud in the sale or want of authority to sell;⁸⁷ but where the bid and payment of the purchase money at an execution sale is regarded as constituting the purchaser's right, the deed is merely evidence of that right.⁸⁸

where the title to the property is in issue;⁸⁹ it is prima facie evidence of a valid execution sale,⁹⁰ and it is also prima facie evidence of the title of the purchaser,⁹¹ at least as to the judgment debtor,⁹² and if supported by proof of the judgment and execution.⁹³ If the deed is defective, it is nevertheless admissible, even in a collateral proceeding, as tending to show that the purchaser at the sale had acquired the equitable title to the land;⁹⁴ and this is true where the deed does not correctly describe the land.⁹⁵

A third person cannot treat possession under a sheriff's deed as a nullity.⁹⁶ Where one has two sheriff's deeds to the same property, under different judgments and executions, his title is good, although one of the deeds is defective.⁹⁷ In some jurisdictions the deed is presumed valid after the lapse of a long period of years.⁹⁸

Collateral attack. While a statute prohibiting collateral attack on sales made by public or municipal authorities has been held inapplicable to sheriff's deeds,⁹⁹ other authority regards such deeds as presumptively valid and not subject to attack in a collateral proceeding.¹

b. Construction

A sheriff's deed is to be construed as a whole and according to the parties' intentions; as to the description of the premises conveyed, it must be construed liberally.

A sheriff's deed is to be construed according to the intentions of the parties,² and in ascertaining

Sheriff

In suit to cancel sheriff's deed on the ground that the judgment was illegal and void for want of service, the sheriff should have been made a party, as one having an interest and not merely as a nominal party.—Haynes v. Arnold, 114 S.E. 360, 154 Ga. 377.

Grantees of purchaser at execution sale were chargeable with knowledge of any defects in title, and therefore the heirs of such grantee should have been parties to a suit brought, after his death, to cancel the sheriff's deed.—Dunn v. Poncelier, 193 So. 723, 239 Ala. 53.

Time of levy

Where a sheriff's deed recites that he levied execution and sold the property levied on under and by authority of the execution, the presumption is that he made the levy its intendment the whole instrument must be construed together.³ Punctuation, or the want of it, is not decisive, if the meaning is clear.⁴ It has been held that the deed is not entitled by inference to as liberal a presumption of intendment as is a direct conveyance by the grantor,⁵ although it is entitled to the effect that its face imports.⁶

Construction as to property or interest conveyed. The deed, as to the description of the premises conveyed, must be construed liberally,⁷ the intention of the parties being controlling.⁸ A sheriff's deed conveys only the estate which it purports to convey,⁹ although defendant in execution had a greater interest subject to levy and sale;¹⁰ but a deed of all the "right, title, and interest" of the debtor passes all his interest,¹¹ although otherwise limited in the deed.¹² Of course, land expressly excepted in the deed does not pass.¹³

§ 281. — Recitals as Prima Facie Evidence

- a. In general
- b. Judgment and execution
- c. Deed of former sheriff or successor

a. In General

Recitals, in a sheriff's deed, of compliance with the requirements of statutes relating to the conduct of the execution sale are prima facie evidence of such compliance.

Recitals, in a sheriff's deed, of compliance with the various requirements of statutes relating to the conduct of the execution sale are prima facie evidence of such compliance,¹⁴ and cannot be impeached collaterally,¹⁵ unless the deed is void on its face.¹⁶ In other words, where a sheriff's deed is supported by the introduction of a judgment and an execution thereunder, which would have authorized the deed if the provisions of the law relating to the sale of the judgment debtor's property were complied with, such deed is prima facie proof of compliance with all provisions of the law necessary to make it a valid transfer of the title to the sheriff's purchaser.¹⁷ Recitals of extraneous matters, which the sheriff is not required to make,¹⁸ or recitals which he had no authority to make,¹⁹ are not evidence of their existence.

Recitals as curing defects. While recitals in a sheriff's deed will not validate a sale which is void on account of failure to observe some statutory requirement,²⁰ yet an irregularity which renders the sale voidable and not void, such as a misdescription of the property, is cured by a correct recital in the deed.²¹

Setting aside deed as to other persons claiming interest

A sheriff's deed conveying "all the right, title, and interest" of the judgment debtor in land will not be set aside as to parties claiming a two-thirds interest therein, since, whatever the judgment debtor's interest actually is, the deed conveys no more than that, so that claimants are not injured by the deed and cannot complain of it.—Mitchell v. Indian Head State Bank, 164 A. 230, 164 Md. 193.

b. Judgment and Execution

In the absence of statute having a contrary effect, the entry of judgment and the issuance of execution cannot be proved by recitals thereof in the sheriff's deed, except where there is privity between the parties or where the execution or record is lost.

In the absence of statute to the contrary, the recitals of the sheriff's deed,²² or of the bill of sale,²³ are not sufficient evidence of the entry of judgment and issuance of execution, except where there is privity between the parties,²⁴ or where the execution or record is lost.²⁵ Under some statutes, however, a party claiming under a sheriff's deed which recites the judgment, execution, and sale is relieved of the necessity of producing the judgment and writ of execution, and the party contesting the deed has the onus of establishing the invalidity of the sale or of the judgment by virtue of which it was made.²⁶ A deed not containing the recitals mentioned in the statute, or not showing a compliance with the law on its face, is inadmissible as evidence,²⁷ unless the judgment and execution are proved aliunde.²⁸

In some jurisdictions a presumption as to the truth of the facts recited in the deed arises after the expiration of a prescribed period.²⁹

c. Deed of Former Sheriff or Successor

The recitals in an ex-sheriff's deed are entitled to the same weight as those in a deed made while in office; but, in the absence of contrary statute, recitals in a sheriff's deed of his predecessor's acts are not evidence of the facts recited, at least where he had no personal knowledge of the facts.

The recitals in a deed made by an ex-sheriff are entitled to the same weight as those in a deed made while he was in office.³⁰ However, recitals in a deed by a sheriff of the acts of his predecessor in office are not evidence of the facts recited³¹ in the absence of a statute making them such evidence.³² A fortiori is this true where it appears that the sheriff had no knowledge of the facts;³³ but it has been held that recitals as to facts within the personal knowledge of the officer executing the deed are prima facie evidence.³⁴

§ 282. — Conclusiveness of Recitals

- a. In general
- b. Persons concluded

a. In General

The recitals of a sheriff's deed may be overcome by a showing that they are false or erroneous.

A sheriff's deed has only prima facie effect,³⁵ and the recitals therein being, if evidence, only prima facie evidence, see supra § 281, they may be overcome by a showing that they are false or erroneous,³⁶ or by a showing, from the record, that the judgment or execution, recited therein, is invalid.³⁷

Recitals in a sheriff's deed are conclusive only as to the parties to the deed and those claiming under them.

The general rule is that the recitals in a sheriff's deed are conclusive as to all parties to the deed and

§ 283. — Relation Back

The general rule is that the sheriff's deed relates back to, and conveys, whatever title or interest the execution defendant had at the time of the sale, the deed being treated as if executed at the time of the creation of the lien under which such sale was made; but this rule is not allowed to operate so as to cut off the intervening rights of strangers without notice.

Although there is contrary authority,⁴² the general rule is that the sheriff's deed relates back to, and conveys, whatever title or interest the execution defendant had at the time of the sale,⁴³ so as to cut off the claims of encumbrancers and purchasers whose interest attached subsequent to the sale of the property,⁴⁴ even where the deed is given after expiration of the period of redemption,⁴⁵ or where a long period has elapsed between the sale and the delivery of the deed.⁴⁶ This rule is not allowed to operate, however, so as to cut off the intervening rights of strangers without notice.⁴⁷

In order to preserve and make effectual the lien under which the execution sale was made, it has been frequently held that the deed must be treated as if executed on the date when such lien was created,⁴⁸ so as to cut off intermediate transfers⁴⁹ or liens,⁵⁰ whether that day is the day of the rendition or docketing of the judgment,⁵¹ or the day of the levy of the execution,⁵² or the day of the levy of the attachment where the execution was issued in an attachment suit,⁵³ provided the attachment proceedings are regular.⁵⁴ The title relates back to the inception of the lien notwithstanding the sheriff's deed purports to convey the debtor's interest at a specified later date.⁵⁵ This rule as to relation back has been held inapplicable, however, where a long period of years has intervened between the giving of the certificate of sale and the deed, and the judgment lien has ceased in the meantime because of the legal presumption of payment of the judgment.⁵⁶

XI. TITLE, RIGHTS, AND LIABILITIES OF PURCHASER

§ 284. In General

So far as the rights of a purchaser at an execution sale are concerned, such sale has the same force and effect as a voluntary conveyance by the debtor. A judgment creditor purchasing at an execution sale acquires the same rights as a stranger would acquire.

In so far as the rights of a purchaser at an execution sale are concerned, a sale on an execution against a judgment debtor has the same force and effect as a voluntary conveyance by the debtor,⁵⁷ and the purchaser bears the same relationship to the debtor that he would bear if he were the purchaser under a voluntary conveyance.⁵⁸ It has been held that the purchaser does not stand in the right of the sheriff, but is the privy of the party under whose execution the sale was made,⁵⁹ although it has also been held that the purchaser stands in no sort of legal privity of contract with the judgment creditor.⁶⁰ Where there is a statute fixing the rights of execution purchasers, the rights of a purchaser are those fixed by the statute rather than those fixed by the decree.⁶¹

In order that a purchaser may make out his title to the property purchased, he must show a valid judgment, or its equivalent, and an execution issued thereon;⁶² but that is all he must do, and he is not required to search for defects or irregularities.⁶³

*A judgment creditor who purchases property at a valid execution sale acquires the same rights which a stranger to the record would acquire by being a successful bidder and purchaser.*⁶⁴ If execution creditors purchase under an agreement that their respective interests shall be in proportion to the relative amount of their claims at the time of the sale, their interest is a joint one and each is bound by the acts of the others.⁶⁵

§ 285. Effect of Satisfaction of Judgment

It is commonly held that the satisfaction of a judgment prior to the execution sale renders the sale void, and that the purchaser takes no title although acting in good faith and without notice.

While in some jurisdictions, especially in the earlier decisions, the rule is laid down that a bona fide purchaser without notice will acquire a good title, even though the execution is paid off or the judgment satisfied before sale, where the satisfaction does not appear of record at the time of or before the sale,⁶⁶ the doctrine of the more numerous and more recent decisions is that the satisfaction of the judgment prior to an execution sale will render such sale void, and the purchaser will take no title thereunder, even though he bought in good faith and without notice.⁶⁷ In any event, no title passes if the purchaser had actual or constructive notice.⁶⁸

Satisfaction of the judgment after the sale does not affect the title of a bona fide purchaser.⁶⁹

§ 286. Property Passing by Sale

What property passes by execution sale depends, in so far as determined by the description in the proceedings, on the particular circumstances, subject to the rule that the levy controls the subsequent proceedings. In general, land purchased at execution sale includes interests in immature and unsevered crops, fixtures, minerals, and timber situated thereon.

What property passes by execution sale, as determined by the description in the levy or the notice of sale or officer's statement made at the sale, depends on the particular circumstances and description of each sale,⁷⁰ subject to the rule that the levy of an execution controls the subsequent proceedings in determining what property passes by the sale.⁷¹ Particular property does not pass where it was sold, but not levied on,⁷² or where it was levied on but was not included in the notice of sale or actually sold,⁷³ or where it was neither levied on, advertised, nor sold.⁷⁴ A sale of a particular tract as containing a certain number of acres will vest the whole tract in the purchaser, although it in fact contains a much greater number;⁷⁵ a fortiori, where a tract of land is levied on and sold as such and described as containing a designated quantity of land "more or less," the purchaser takes the whole tract without reference to the computed quantity which it is said to contain.⁷⁶

Crops. While there is a contrary view,⁷⁷ growing crops belonging to the owner of the land, before severance, are commonly held to pass with a sale of the land on execution,⁷⁸ unless there be an express reservation in the deed,⁷⁹ although it has also been held that the sheriff cannot reserve growing crops which would otherwise vest in the purchaser.⁸⁰ An attempted execution sale of immature crops as personalty passes no title to the purchaser,⁸¹ at least as against another execution purchaser of the land on which the crops are being grown.⁸² A purchaser of land at a sale under execution against the owner thereof acquires no interest in the growing crops beyond that of the judgment debtor.⁸³ Where the judgment debtor has leased the land to a third person, and the tenant is entitled to the crop, as where he pays a cash rent, the execution purchaser does not acquire title thereto;⁸⁴ but the right of the purchaser to growing crops exists against a lessee who after the sale, sows a crop which will not mature before the time when the execution purchaser will be entitled to possession.⁸⁵

Crops which have been severed before the execution sale do not pass as a part of the realty;⁸⁶ and in some states a crop fully matured is not considered a part of the realty and does not pass on an execution sale of the realty.⁸⁷ Where the legal title to property sold on execution does not pass until the sale is confirmed, the title to a crop harvested after sale but before confirmation does not pass to the purchaser,⁸⁸ but crops planted after confirmation pass to the purchaser.⁸⁹ The purchaser of land cannot maintain trespass for the crops where he does not obtain possession by ejectment;⁹⁰ and, where the purchaser does not take possession of the land and allows the judgment debtor to remain in possession and to sow and grow a crop, neither the purchaser nor his grantee is entitled to enter and remove a portion of the crops as owner thereof.⁹¹

Fixtures and improvements. The general rule is that a levy on, and sale of, realty will pass to the purchaser all fixtures and improvements thereon,⁹² including those erected or made by the debtor after the sale and before the sheriff's deed.⁹³ However, if a fixture is detached and converted into personalty by the agreement of the owners and the lien creditors, it does not pass.⁹⁴

Minerals. The purchaser of land at an execution sale acquires whatever interest the debtor may have had in the minerals under the land.⁹⁵

Interest under mining lease

(1) An agreement by which land-owners "granted, bargained, sold, let and leased" limestone under land, with right of ingress to mine and remove limestone, in consideration of royalty for limestone mined, was a "sale of limestone in place as land", and landowners retained interest in limestone to which lien of judgment against landowners attached, and such interest passed to purchasers of land at sheriff's sale pursuant to fieri facias issued on judgment.—Burke v. Kerr, supra.

(2) Where fee owner of seven eighths mineral estate leased interest retaining one eighth royalty in seven eighths of minerals and judgment creditor thereafter levied on lessor's interest, elements of lessor's interest, consisting of royalty rights, right to demand and receive payment of rentals in lieu of drilling operations, and inchoate right to reversion of the working interest held by the lessee, were merged together in one ownership to form under statute "all the right, title, interest and claim which the defendant in execution had in and to the property," and deed to purchaser at execution sale conveyed such interest, which included lessor's "possibility of reverter."—Jensen v. Wilkinson, Tex.Civ.App., 133 S.W.2d

Timber and trees. Standing timber on land subject to a judgment lien passes to the purchaser of the land at the execution sale;⁹⁶ and the same is true of timber which has been cut at the time of the sale but which is still on the property and has not been converted into lumber or articles and which has not been withdrawn or excepted from the sale.⁹⁷ The purchaser at an execution sale, as against the judgment debtor, takes title to nursery trees sold on the execution and growing on the land, and has the right to remove them;⁹⁸ but one who purchased merely the standing timber and not the land has no right to operate a turpentine orchard in connection with such timber, and therefore cannot convey such right.⁹⁹

§ 287. Estate or Interest Acquired

a. In general

b. Particular interests

a. In General

The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to execution sales, and, subject to certain exceptions, the purchaser takes whatever title the execution debtor has, no more and no less.

Except where fraud intervenes,¹ the rule is well settled that the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to execution sales, and that purchasers thereat must take notice of the title for which they bid;² thus there is no implied warranty of title.³ However, where there is an express warranty as to the quantity of property on sale, the doctrine of caveat emptor does not apply as to quantity.⁴

Subject to the exceptions considered later in this subdivision, the purchaser under a valid execution sale takes just what title or interest defendant in the execution has, no more and no less;⁵ and, except in so far as he may have the right to redeem, see § 253 supra, the defendant loses all the title and interest he had in the property.⁶ Thus the purchaser at an execution sale, even though in good faith, acquires no title where the judgment debtor had none,⁷ as where he transferred it before the lien of the judgment attached to it.⁸

The contention that a sheriff's sale is analogous to a sale in market overt, and that for that reason a purchaser takes title to property sold thereat, although the debtor had none, has been explicitly repudiated.⁹ The sheriff's deed passes the same title which a deed of bargain and sale executed by the debtor would pass.¹⁰ In other words, the sale operates as a conveyance of the title which the debtor was capable of conveying.¹¹

It is held that a purchaser at a sheriff's sale on execution acquires no better title than the judgment creditor would have received had he purchased,¹²

Naked legal title subject to trust

One purchasing at execution sale realty to which judgment debtors held only naked legal title, subject

A parol agreement to purchase land sold on execution and reconvey to the debtor on the payment by him to the purchaser of the amount paid out by the latter will be enforced where, by reason of such an agreement, others refrain from bidding at the sale, or the purchaser procures the land on terms more favorable than he otherwise would have obtained, even though the statute of frauds be pleaded.²⁰ However, a mere naked verbal agreement by a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, who purchases with his own money, that he will hold the premises in trust for the debtor does not vest any equitable estate in the debtor.²¹

b. Particular Interests

The rule, with its exceptions, that an execution purchaser acquires only the interest which the debtor had has been applied to various types of interest in property, including equity of redemption, life estate, estate for years, leasehold, remainder or reversion, rights under a contract of purchase, and part interest in property.

The rule stated in subdivision a of this section, to the effect that, subject to certain exceptions, the purchaser acquires only the interest which the debtor had, has been applied to various particular interests, such as the interest of a trustee in property,²² the interest of a beneficiary of a trust,²³ the interest of a devisee under a will,²⁴ and other to trust imposed in them for equitable owners thereof, acquired no interest therein, except possible naked legal title subject to such trust, with duty to convey title to beneficiaries.—Rabbit v. Atkinson, 113 P.2d 14, 44 Cal.App.2d 752—Goldberg, Bowen & Co. v. Demick, 247 P. 261, 77 Cal.App. 535—23 C.J. p 747 note 16 [b].

23. Right to enforce trust

A sale on execution of personal property of which the judgment defendant is the beneficial owner, but title to which is in a trustee, does not convey to the purchaser the legal title, but only the right to enforce the trust.—Big Sespe Oil Co. v. Cochran, C.C.A.Cal., 276 F. 216.

As to corpus of trust

Sale of trust property under execution which would destroy trust would be ineffectual during existence of trust, but not void, especially when trust was in respect to income from land bequeathed, and there was no express restraint in matter of principal of fund or corpus of estate.—Estes v. Estes, Tex.Com.App., 267 S.W. 709, affirming, Civ.App., 255 S.W. 649.

24. As dependent on executrix

Execution purchaser of devisee's interest in estate in hands of executrix would acquire title only to whatever property executrix might set aside as judgment debtor's inter-

interests.²⁵

Equity of redemption. Where the execution sale is of all the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor in property which has been mortgaged by him, it passes to the purchaser all the interest that the judgment debtor has in the property, including the equity of redemption;²⁶ but where the sale is merely of the equity of redemption, it does not pass an interest or estate in the land not covered by the mortgage.²⁷ Where the levy is restricted to the equity of redemption, the purchaser acquires no greater interest;²⁸ and in such case a sale of the property, rather than of the equity, to the judgment creditor passes nothing.²⁹ The sale and conveyance of an equity of redemption conveys no interest at all where the property is unencumbered,³⁰ as where prior to the sale the mortgage is paid.³¹ In a jurisdiction where a deed absolute in form but given as security is deemed to leave the legal title in the grantor, an execution purchaser of all the interest of the mortgagor acquires the legal title subject to the mortgage.³²

Life estate; estate for years; leasehold interest.

Where a sale under execution is of property in which the judgment debtor has only a life estate,³³ or an estate for years,³⁴ the sale passes the limited estate, but not the fee, even though the sheriff's deed purports to convey the fee.³⁵

Thus if a leasehold interest is sold the purchaser takes only the interest of the lessee,³⁶ and acquires the same rights that the lessee had, but no greater ones.³⁷ He stands in the position of an assignee of the estate;³⁸ he takes subject to all the covenants and conditions contained in the lease,³⁹ and cannot dispute the title of the lessor.⁴⁰ If the interest of the lessee has terminated, the purchaser cannot hold the property as against the lessor.⁴¹

Remainder or reversion. If the sale is of a remainder or reversion, the sheriff's deed is as effectual to pass the title thereto as is the deed of the remainderman or reversioner;⁴² the sale is subject to the terms of the instrument creating the estate⁴³ and to the right of the life tenant to possess and control the property during life.⁴⁴

As a contingent remainder,⁴⁵ as well as an heir's possibility of reverter on breach of a condition sub-est in estate under will.—Gregg v. First Nat. Bank, Tex.Com.App., 26 S.W.2d 179, reversing First Nat. Bank v. Browne, Civ.App., 18 S.W.2d 772.

Estate subject to control by others

Where testatrix devised all her estate to her children, including judgment debtor, share and share alike, but provided that the estate should be kept intact under complete management of independent executors for five years from date of testatrix' death, purchaser of judgment debtor's interest at execution sale would succeed only to title of judgment debtor, and could not interrupt control of executors.—Lozano v. Guerra, Tex.Civ.App., 140 S.W.2d 587.

25. Decedent's estate

A sheriff's sale under a judgment in favor of a creditor of decedent divested all title or interest of the estate, of the widow as life tenant, and of the remaindermen or heirs.—Fowler v. Blackstock, 112 S.E. 893, 153 Ga. 706.

sequent,⁴⁶ is not subject to, or extinguished by, a sale on execution, an attempted sale thereof does not pass title.

Rights under contract of purchase. One who purchases, at execution sale, land which the debtor had previously contracted to convey, and who has notice of such agreement, takes the legal title subject to the right of the vendee to compel a conveyance thereof to him on compliance with the terms of the contract.⁴⁷ While it has been held that the purchaser becomes entitled to all sums still to be paid by the vendee,⁴⁸ it has also been held that the purchaser is not so entitled without some proceeding to charge the vendee with the payment thereof to him, and that in the absence of such a proceeding the vendee will be protected in payments made to the debtor.⁴⁹ After an execution sale against the vendor, his deed to his vendee is of no effect as against the execution purchaser.⁵⁰

Where property in the possession of an execution debtor, as the vendee under a contract of purchase, is sold on execution, the execution purchaser acquires only such title or interest as the debtor had under the terms of the contract,⁵¹ and acquires no title where a performance, or a tender of performance, of the terms of the contract cannot be shown.⁵² Only the equitable title passes to the purchaser,⁵³ regardless of whether the contract was recorded or not.⁵⁴ The debtor cannot affect the rights of the purchaser by a subsequent voluntary surrender of the bond for title to his vendor.⁵⁵ Even where the interest of a conditional vendee is held not subject to execution, the rights of a purchaser are those of the debtor and cannot be questioned except by the conditional vendor or a chattel mortgagee having superior right.⁵⁶

Part interest in property. Where property owned by two or more persons is sold on execution against one of them only, the purchaser at the execution sale takes such, and only such, interest as the judgment debtor had in such property, and becomes a tenant in common with the other owners thereof,⁵⁷ even though the sheriff purports to sell the entire property;⁵⁸ but if the property cannot be identified by the description in the sheriff's deed no title passes.⁵⁹ Where one tenant by the entirety purchases at execution sale the interest of his cotenant, he acquires title to the property for the joint lives of both tenants.⁶⁰

A sale of land as the property of one defendant passes no title to the interest of his codefendant;⁶¹ but a sale of the undivided interest of a codefendant passes a good title to such interest even though the interest of the other defendant was not sold.⁶²

§ 288. — Time as of Which Title Vests in Purchaser

The purchaser acquires the title which the debtor had at the time the execution lien was created, or, if the judgment was a lien on the property, at the date of the judgment on which the execution was issued. Title or interests acquired by the debtor after the sale do not pass; but interests acquired after the levy but before the sale do pass.

The title which passes on an execution sale in which the whole title is sold is ordinarily that which the debtor had at the time the execution lien was created,⁶³ so as to cut off transfers, liens, or equities made or acquired in the interim and before the sale,⁶⁴ at least where not known to the purchaser.⁶⁵ No subsequent act of the lessee, or of an assignee or mortgagee of the leasehold claiming under the lessee, can enlarge or diminish the title as it stood at the time the lien attached.⁶⁶

If the purchase is of property on which the judgment was a lien, the purchaser acquires such interest as the debtor had at the date of the judgment on which the execution was issued,⁶⁷ or, under other authority, at the date of the docketing of the judgment;⁶⁸ and a deed of the debtor after the judgment lien has attached does not give a title superior to that of the execution purchaser.⁶⁹ However, where the lien of the judgment has expired before execution is issued, the purchaser at the sale acquires only the interest the debtor has at the time of the issuance of the execution.⁷⁰

Title acquired by the debtor after the levy but before the sale passes to the purchaser,⁷¹ even though the sheriff's deed by its terms conveys only the title at the time of the judgment,⁷² but not where the title at the time of the levy was equitable and not subject to execution.⁷³

Title acquired after sale. It is a general rule that title or interests acquired by the debtor after the sale do not pass to the purchaser.⁷⁴ Thus the legal title subsequently acquired by the judgment debtor does not inure to the benefit of the purchaser of the equitable title at the execution sale.⁷⁵ However, the rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that where a judgment debtor holding, under a land office certificate, land which is sold under execution against him, thereafter acquires a patent for such land, the perfected title will inure to the benefit of the execution purchaser and cannot be set up adversely to him.⁷⁶

§ 289. Time When Title Passes

Some authorities hold that title passes at the time of the execution sale, others that it does not pass until delivery of the sheriff's deed after the redemption period, and still others that it does not pass until the sale is confirmed by the court; but no title passes until payment of the purchase price. Before the delivery of the deed the purchaser acquires an equitable estate in the realty sold.

In some jurisdictions title is held to pass at the time of the execution sale, subject to the right of the debtor to defeat such transfer by redemption within the statutory period;⁷⁷ and the effect of the sheriff's subsequent deed is merely to show that the title of the purchaser has become absolute.⁷⁸ In other jurisdictions, the legal title to real property sold does not pass until delivery of the sheriff's deed, see supra § 266, after the expiration of

Cattle at large

Under statute to that effect, range levy and sale of portion of cattle herd does not pass title until buyer has gathered and selected specific animals claimed under certificate of sale; but range levy and sale of entire class described in certificate of sale passes title on delivery of certificate, without need of gathering and selecting cattle.—*Hagan v. the time for redemption.⁷⁹ Where a statute requires that the sale shall be confirmed by the court, title does not vest in the purchaser until after such confirmation and the delivery of a deed.⁸⁰

In any event, the highest bidder acquires no title to the thing purchased until payment of the purchase price;⁸¹ and, if the statute authorizes a sale to be made only for cash, a conveyance of land to the purchaser without payment of the bid in cash passes no title.⁸²

Rights prior to delivery of deed. Even under the rule requiring the delivery of the sheriff's deed to pass title, the purchaser acquires an equitable estate the moment the real property is sold,⁸³ which continues until the time for redemption has expired.⁸⁴ While this interest has been called a lien,⁸⁵ it has more frequently been regarded as more than a mere lien.⁸⁶ After the expiration of the period allowed for redemption, without a redemption having been made by any of the persons entitled to it, the equitable estate of the purchaser becomes absolute and the debtor is merely the holder of the legal title,⁸⁷ with authority in the sheriff to divest it by executing a deed to the purchaser.⁸⁸

After the expiration of the time for redemption, but before the execution of a sheriff's deed, the purchaser has a title subject to execution against him,⁸⁹ an interest which, although assignable, and capable of being inherited, is inchoate in character;⁹⁰ he has an equitable estate which is not terminated by the expiration of the time during which the judgment is a lien.⁹¹

§ 290. Rights Passing as Incidents

Rights incidental to the property sold under execution generally pass to the purchaser; but various particular rights or interests have been held not to pass.

Rights incidental to the property sold under execution generally pass to the purchaser,⁹² including all easements appurtenant to the land sold, although not referred to in the proceedings for sale.⁹³ Thus the purchaser of cattle is the owner of their increase from the time of the attachment.⁹⁴

On the other hand, particular rights or interests have been held not to pass as incidental to the particular property sold.⁹⁵ Thus it has been held that the purchaser of lands or equipment of a debtor does not acquire his franchise or license;⁹⁶ that a sale of the property of a corporation under a statute authorizing a levy and sale on "any personal, mixed or real property, franchises and rights of such corporation" does not pass title to a claim for damages existing in favor of the corporation,⁹⁷ or any chose in action;⁹⁸ that water rights do not pass as appurtenances to land sold, unless so intended by the judgment debtor;⁹⁹ and that money paid in proceedings by which part of the property was condemned does not belong to the purchaser as against a mortgagee, where the mortgagor who was the execution debtor had no right thereto as against the mortgagee.¹

Mortgages or mortgaged property. The purchaser of a note and mortgage has the election to surrender the mortgage or to enforce it.² It has been held that on a sale of mortgaged property the purchaser does not acquire the mortgage notes³ or the mortgagor's equitable right to insist on other land covered by the mortgage being sold first;⁴ nor does a purchaser of a mortgagor's equity of redemption acquire any interest in a money deposit made to secure the mortgages against prior liens and to be applied only after the exhaustion of the mortgaged property, where the deposit was assigned to a third person prior to the judgment and execution sale.⁵ A sale of all the right and interest of a mortgagor of chattels, under a chattel mortgage which had not been filed as required by statute, is not a sale subject to the mortgage, and the purchaser acquires not only the interest of the mortgagor, but also the right of the execution creditor to treat the mortgage as void.⁶

Patented or copyrighted matter. The sale under execution against a patentee of a patented machine, made by the patentee for his own use, by implication invests the purchaser with a license to use that particular machine even though the patentee does not manufacture for sale.⁷ However, the purchaser of the plates of a copyrighted book acquires no right to use such plates to reproduce copies of such book.⁸

The purchaser of land leased to a tenant acquires all the rights of the debtor with respect to such lease.⁹ It has been held that a purchaser has the right to affirm or disaffirm a lease of the property,¹⁰ but that, where the tenant has notice of the sale, no notice of an intention to affirm the lease is necessary.¹¹

§ 291. Liens or Incumbrances on Property

- a. In general
- b. Particular liens

a. In General

Subject to certain exceptions, a purchaser at execution sale of property on which there is a prior lien takes the property subject to such lien; and the removal of liens or encumbrances from the property inures to his benefit. The purchaser may, in a proper case, be estopped to attack the validity of a prior lien; and the lienor may, similarly, be estopped to assert his lien.

In most jurisdictions prior liens are not affected by the execution sale of the property, and the purchaser takes the property subject to such liens,¹² except in so far as the rule may be affected by his being a bona fide purchaser, see infra §§ 293-297. However, in a few jurisdictions it has been held that the execution purchaser takes free from prior liens;¹³ that existing liens are not affected by a foreclosure sale under special execution unless the lien holders are made parties to the proceeding;¹⁴ and, under statute to that effect, that the purchaser acquires not title to encumbered property, but merely a lien thereon to the amount of the purchase price,¹⁵ which lien is junior to the prior encum-

Effect of deed

Under this rule, the purchaser is not entitled to a deed, but the giving of a deed will not render the sale

brances.¹⁶ Under statute to that effect, an execution sale of personal property of a perishable nature divests prior liens thereon.¹⁷ A purchaser having a prior lien has been allowed to retain the amount of his bid up to the amount of his lien.¹⁸

In Pennsylvania it is generally held that liens on realty sold under execution are divested or discharged by the sale, even though they are prior and superior to the lien being enforced by the sale;¹⁹ under this rule, the prior lienor is entitled to satisfaction from the proceeds of the sale, and the purchaser takes title free therefrom.²⁰ The rule does not apply, however, where the sale is expressly made subject to the lien, or it is agreed or clearly understood between the parties that the sale shall be subject to liens;²¹ where the existing lien is one specifically made by law an exception to the rule;²² where the property subject to the lien is sold on execution after it has been fraudulently conveyed by the debtor;²³ where the lien is incapable of being made definite and certain;²⁴ or where the lien is expressly created to run with the land.²⁵ So, also, where the title of an heir or devisee is sold on execution before the sale to pay the decedent's debts, the lien of the ancestor's debts is not divested;²⁶ and an execution sale will not divest a lien or charge on land where, in order to effectuate the trust created by the charge, it will be necessary for the court to reinvest the fund arising from the execution sale, thus substituting a plan other than that contemplated by the person creating the charge.²⁷ Arrears of ground rent are not discharged, because they constitute an estate in the land and not a mere lien,²⁸ and for the same reason a widow's right of dower is not divested.²⁹ Similarly, dues of the commonwealth depend not on a lien, but a paramount title, which no sheriff's sale can affect.³⁰

Junior liens. A purchaser of property at an execution sale does not take subject to liens junior to the one under which the execution sale was made,³¹ except, it has been held, in the case of a tax lien.³²

Effect of removal of liens. The removal of encumbrances or liens from the property sold by payment or the expiration thereof inures to the benefit of the purchaser at the execution sale, and to that extent confirms his title to the property.³³

Estoppel to contest or set up lien. In the absence of facts constituting an estoppel, the execution purchaser may contest the validity of prior liens or encumbrances,³⁴ as where the sale is of all the right, title, and interest of defendant in execution.³⁵ However, the purchaser may be estopped to attack the validity of the lien where the sale void.—Hazard Lumber & Supply Co. v. Horn, 15 S.W.2d 492, 228 Ky. 554.

Requirement of bond

The purchaser of encumbered personal property is required to execute a bond that he will not remove the property from the county and will preserve it to answer the encumbrance.—Durret v. Bouche, 5 Ky.Op. 667.

Time of divestment

Liens are divested on completion of the sale and as of the date of sale, that is, the date on which property is knocked down to a bidding purchaser, who completes his bid, and not the date when sheriff's deed is acknowledged; and liens against purchaser attach as of such date.—Keystone State Building & Loan Ass'n v. Sabo, 14 A.2d 831, 140 Pa. Super. 599.

is made expressly subject to a subsisting lien, or where the purchaser has notice, and recognizes the existence, of such lien,³⁶ although there is also authority to the contrary.³⁷ The execution purchaser may be estopped to deny the validity of a lien or an encumbrance where the amount thereof was deducted for purposes of appraisal and the purchase was for less than two thirds of the appraised value of the property.³⁸ Where there are two or more encumbrances on the property, the purchaser may be estopped as to one but entitled to contest the others.³⁹

The holder of a lien may be estopped by his conduct and declarations to set up his lien against the execution purchaser.⁴⁰

b. Particular Liens

Execution purchasers of property, encumbered by judgment or execution liens, mortgages, pledges, and vendor's liens, have frequently been held to take the property subject to such encumbrances; but in various situations a different rule has been followed, or a different result reached.

In a number of jurisdictions the effect of an execution sale under a junior judgment is to pass the debtor's estate in the property encumbered with the lien of an older judgment;⁴¹ and it is even held that where both the elder and younger judgments are owned by the same person, he may sell under the junior lien, without disturbing the lien of the senior judgment or prejudicing his right to enforce it, provided there is no deceit or unfairness toward the purchaser.⁴² However, in some jurisdictions, liens of judgments or executions on property sold under execution are divested thereby, even though they are prior and superior to the lien being enforced by the sale,⁴³ or, in the absence of fraud, even though the prior judgment was obtained against a former owner and the execution is against a subsequent owner,⁴⁴ and the lien is transferred from the property to the proceeds of the sale in the hands of the sheriff.⁴⁵ An exception to the latter rule exists where the property is sold expressly subject to the prior judgment⁴⁶ or execution⁴⁷ lien. Where statutes require that executions issue on judgments within a designated period after their rendition, a sale on execution on a junior judgment, after the failure to issue execution on the senior judgment within the statutory period, will pass the property free of the lien of the senior judgment.⁴⁸

A sale under a senior judgment cancels the lien of a junior judgment, which is thereafter transferred to the surplus proceeds of the sale;⁴⁹ but

Reasons for rule

(1) The purchaser in such circumstances acquires the property at a lower price than he would otherwise have to pay, since the mortgagee is not required to bid to protect his interests.

N.J.—F. R. Patch Mfg. Co. v. William A. Gahagan Co., 114 A. 321, 93 N.J.Eq. 73, affirmed 115 A. 926, 93 N.J.Eq. 223.

Vt.—People's Trust Co. of St. Albans v. Finn, 175 A. 4, 106 Vt. 345.

(2) Moreover, terms of sale, although not creating direct liability to pay mortgage debt, create condition which purchaser is required to perform to perfect title to property.—People's Trust Co. of St. Albans v. Finn, supra.

Purchase subject to two mortgages

Purchaser on execution sale which bought subject to two mortgages and thereafter paid off prior mortgage and took assignment thereof was estopped to deny validity of second mortgage, since it would not be permitted to acquire property at price lower than it bid at sale.—People's Trust Co. of St. Albans v. Finn, supra.

Claiming proceeds

Where intervenor who claimed part of seized property under prior attachment consented to sale under later attachment by claiming proceeds thereof, property did not pass to purchaser burdened with privilege of prior attachment.—Caldwell v. Laurel Grove Co., 153 So. 17, 179 La. 53.

Facts preventing estoppel

The lienholder is not estopped if he was not present at the sale and had no reason to believe that the execution purchaser did not know of the claim.—Brotherton v. Anderson, 66 S.W. 682, 27 Tex.Civ.App. 587.

if there be no surplus, the junior judgment creditor must save his debt by redeeming from the sale.⁵⁰

The effect of a sale under both senior and junior judgments is to vest the title in the purchaser and transfer the liens in the same order of priority to the proceeds of the sale.⁵¹

Mortgages. In most jurisdictions a purchaser of mortgaged property at an execution sale under judgment against the mortgagor takes the property subject to the paramount lien of the mortgage,⁵² although it has also been held that the lien of the mortgage is divested and attaches only to the proceeds of the execution sale.⁵³ However, where the execution is based on the mortgage debt, the purchaser takes free from the mortgage lien and all subsequent liens and assignments.⁵⁴ In Pennsylvania, under an early statute, the lien of a prior mortgage was divested,⁵⁵ but the rule has been changed by a statute which is applicable where there are no liens prior to the mortgage,⁵⁶ although not where there are.⁵⁷

Where the majority rule prevails, the execution purchaser stands in the same position as the mortgagor.⁵⁸ He has no equities as against the mortgage,⁵⁹ and cannot defend against it on a ground which was not open to the mortgagor.⁶⁰ A payment and satisfaction of the mortgage inures to his benefit,⁶¹ conferring on him full title⁶² with protection against intermediate purchasers with notice.⁶³ It requires the consent of the mortgagor, mortgagee, and the execution creditor to sell the entire interest in the property free from the lien of the mortgage,⁶⁴ but after an execution sale of

Presumption of consent

In sale under judgment inferior to mortgage, consent of mortgagor, mortgagee, and plaintiff in fieri facias to sale of entire interest in property

mortgaged land, the mortgagor cannot, by joining in a consent with the mortgagee, cause the entire estate in the land to be sold and conveyed under another judgment against him in favor of the mortgagee.⁶⁵

A sale under an execution senior to a mortgage will of course divest the lien of the mortgage,⁶⁶ although the mortgagee will have a right in equity to have the liens marshaled so that the execution may be satisfied out of personalty.⁶⁷

Under some statutes, the execution purchaser of mortgaged chattels acquires no title as against the mortgagee without paying the amount due or performing the condition of the mortgage.⁶⁸ The officer must hold the property after the execution sale thereof until the terms of the mortgage have been complied with by the purchaser;⁶⁹ but the purchaser has a lien on the chattels for the excess remaining after satisfaction of the mortgage.⁷⁰

will be presumed, where entire interest was levied on, sold, and conveyed, mortgagor was insolvent, and mortgagee, in obtaining his judgment under which property was sold, had set up and established a preferred lien on property mortgaged.—*Coweta Fertilizer Co. v. Pledge of bank stock

Under Florida law possession of national bank stock certificate by pledgee of the stock protects pledgee in case of sale by sheriff on execution against pledgor, although pledge is not entered on bank's books, and the sale, if valid, passes title of pledgor subject to the pledge.—Brightwell v. First Nat. Bank, C.C. A.Fla., 109 F.2d 271.

Pledgee without valid lien

The fact that the pledgee of property who has no valid lien thereon gives notice of his claim to prospective purchasers and to the pledgor's judgment creditor prior to the execution sale, but after the property has been levied on, does not render the execution creditor liable for his claim where he purchases the car at the sale.—*Ewing v. Vendor's lien. A purchaser under an execution sale of land encumbered with a vendor's lien acquires the title of the execution defendant subject to such lien,⁷² except as the rule may be affected by his being a bona fide purchaser, see §§ 293–297 infra, and at least where the judgment creditor is one other than the vendor,⁷³ for where the vendor is the judgment creditor and the judgment is for the balance of the purchase money, the title of the vendor as well as that of the purchaser passes.⁷⁴

Under statute to that effect a sheriff's sale of property encumbered by vendor's lien does not pass title, but merely creates a lien in the purchaser.⁷⁵

§ 292. Equities against Debtor

The general rule is that an execution purchaser takes subject to rights and equities outstanding against the execution debtor, except as the rule may be affected by the purchaser's being a bona fide purchaser.

Where judgment debtor did not own land sold under execution but had in good faith conveyed it to his daughter, to whom it had in fact at all times belonged, purchasers at execution sale took subject to rights of daughter, notwithstanding record title was in judgment debtor when judgment was recovered.—*Cain v. Rights of lessee

The lien of a judgment recovered against a lessor subsequent to the giving of a lease by him was inferior to the leasehold interest of the lessee, and the purchaser at a sale under a fieri facias thereon would take the property subject to the lease.—*Western Union Telegraph Co. v. § 293. Bona Fide Purchasers

- a. In general
- b. Scope of inquiry
- c. Effect of being bona fide purchaser

a. In General

To be a bona fide purchaser at an execution sale one must purchase for a valuable consideration and without notice, actual or constructive.

As stated generally, the rule is that, in order to constitute a purchaser at an execution sale a bona fide purchaser, he must purchase for a valuable consideration and without notice, actual or constructive, of any equities outstanding against the property, or of any irregularities in the proceedings which would vitiate the sale.⁷⁹ More specifically, a bona fide purchaser is one who has the legal title to property,⁸⁰ and has paid therefor a valuable consideration, discussed infra this subdivision, in good faith,⁸¹ without notice, actual or constructive, of defects or vices in the title, considered infra § 294. A purchaser at an execution sale will be deemed an innocent purchaser where he would have been deemed such at a voluntary sale.⁸²

Payment of valuable consideration. A purchaser

at an execution sale who has not paid the amount of his bid is not considered a bona fide purchaser.⁸³

Some courts take the view that gross inadequacy of consideration precludes the purchaser from being considered a bona fide purchaser.⁸⁴ Other courts, however, hold that inadequacy of consideration alone is not sufficient to support a claim that the purchaser is not a purchaser in good faith.⁸⁵ At any rate, the inadequacy of the price paid will be considered on the question of the good faith of the purchaser,⁸⁶ and may be sufficient to put him on inquiry.⁸⁷

Execution sale under void judgment. A purchaser at an execution sale under a void judgment is not an innocent purchaser.⁸⁸

b. Scope of Inquiry

An execution purchaser is bound at his peril to inquire whether it sufficiently appears on the face of the record that the court has jurisdiction to render judgment and whether there is a valid execution and sale; but he is not bound to make further inquiry into the regularity of the proceedings.

In order to determine whether the officer is duly authorized to make the sale,⁸⁹ the execution purchaser is bound at his peril to inquire whether it sufficiently appears on the face of the record that the court has jurisdiction to render judgment⁹⁰ and whether there is a valid execution,⁹¹ and sale.⁹² In other words, the purchaser is bound to inquire into the power and means by which the property is subjected to the sale.⁹³ However, he is not bound to make further inquiry into the regularity of the proceedings,⁹⁴ except, in some jurisdictions, where the purchaser is the judgment creditor or his attorney, see infra § 295.

Where the judgment on which the execution was issued appears on its face to be barred by lapse of time, it is sufficient to put the purchaser on inquiry as to whether it has been discharged.⁹⁵ So far as title is concerned, the execution purchaser is bound to look to the possession when the sale is made and to the records, and if neither of these furnish any evidence that defendant has parted with his interest, he is not required to look further.⁹⁶ The purchaser is not required to look beyond the records, to determine whether apparent liens or encumbrances have or have not been discharged,⁹⁷ or to determine whether the sale is subject to liens.⁹⁸

c. Effect of Being Bona Fide Purchaser

Generally, a bona fide execution purchaser takes free of equities, secret liens, unrecorded conveyances and infirmities in the judgment or subsequent proceedings.

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁹⁹ a bona fide purchaser at an execution sale generally does not take subject to equities.¹ He takes free from secret liens,² and from unrecorded conveyances where the instrument is one which the statutes require to be recorded.³ He is not affected by infirmities in the judgment or proceedings subsequent thereto which do not appear on the face of the record, such as secret vices, frauds, defects, or other secret infirmities.⁴

In order that the statutory rule that an execution purchaser takes free from an unrecorded mortgage or conveyance may apply, the execution purchaser must acquire some real or apparent interest in the property to be protected; the rule does not apply where, prior to the execution sale, the judgment debtor has been divested of all legal and equitable interest in the property.⁵ An equitable estate cannot be converted into a legal estate by the application of the rule.⁶ The statutes do not apply so as to require a recording of a receipt for an advancement, in order that an execution purchaser may take subject to the advancement.⁷

Claim of heirs to community property. Where real estate which was community property of husband and wife is sold after the death of the wife on an execution issued on a judgment against the husband, a purchaser for value without notice of the death of the wife or of the claims of her heirs acquires a valid title as against the heirs.⁸

sonably prudent man on inquiry is constructive notice,¹⁰ and an execution purchaser is affected with notice of all that is patent on an examination of the premises he is about to buy.¹¹ Where the levy is excessive, the purchaser must be held chargeable with notice of the value of the property, and of the legal rules bearing on the transaction.¹² He, of course, has notice where he is privy to the arrangement for the selling of a vast amount of property under an execution for a small sum.¹³

Notice does not generally arise from one circumstance alone, but from a collection of facts which, taken together, may be held sufficient to put a person on inquiry.¹⁴ The notice should come from the person claiming an interest in the lands,¹⁵ and it should be direct and full as to the fact that he then owns and claims the lands.¹⁶ A mere general statement of the judgment debtor, without giving details, that he owns no property or has sold all of his property, is not notice;¹⁷ nor is the purchaser put on inquiry by a mere general notice at the time of sale that the judgment debtor does not own the property,¹⁸ or that a third person has title and possession.¹⁹

Knowledge that both husband and wife join in a deed is not notice that the wife holds title to the property as her separate property under an unrecorded deed.²⁰

The notice of title which a record gives is only of the title as shown thereby; it is not notice of a secret trust,³¹ or of extraneous facts qualifying or contradicting the recorded instrument;³² but where a recorded instrument indicates or declares a trust, it is constructive notice of the rights and title of the persons interested therein.³³ An execution purchaser can be held to no further knowledge of the action taken by the court in a suit or proceeding to which he is not a party than that furnished by the record;³⁴ he is not bound to take notice of the information contained in the minutes or memoranda made by the judge on his own docket,³⁵ or of dockets or memoranda of the sheriff which do not possess the characteristics of a record.³⁶ A record of the suit, regular on its face, does not charge the execution purchaser with knowledge of fraud in procuring the judgment.³⁷

c. Possession by Third Person

Generally, where a third person is in possession, either personally or by tenant, of the land at the time of the execution sale and is claiming it as his own, the purchaser is charged with notice of his claim.

Where a third person is in possession, either personally or by tenant, of the land at the time of the execution sale and is claiming it as his own, the purchaser is charged with notice of the claim.³⁸

To be sufficient to impart notice, the possession must be actual,³⁹ exclusive,⁴⁰ open,⁴¹ notorious,⁴² visible,⁴³ and continuous.⁴⁴ The change of possession from the execution debtor must be actual rather than constructive.⁴⁵ Where two or more persons are in possession of the property as a family, and the record title is in the name of one of such persons, the possession of another member of the family is not notice of his or her claim under an unrecorded deed.⁴⁶

Notice which possession imparts is limited where the person in possession places on record a title consistent with his possession; it may be assumed that he holds under the recorded title.⁴⁷

to the grantee under an unrecorded deed;⁴⁸ but the continuance of the tenant in possession is not notice of the rights of the grantee where the tenant does not attorn to the grantee, or pay rent to him, or recognize his title.⁴⁹

Possession by tenant in common. A taking or continuance of possession by a tenant in common who has purchased the interests of his cotenants and taken an unrecorded deed is not sufficient to constitute notice.⁵⁰

d. Time of Notice

Notice to be effective, must be given before the execution sale or before payment is made. Under some statutes the recording of an instrument after judgment but before the sale is ineffective, but under other statutes instruments recorded after judgment but before the sale constitute notice to the execution purchaser.

Notice to the execution purchaser may be given at any time before payment is made,⁵¹ but notice given after the sale and after payment has been made is generally ineffective.⁵²

Under statutes giving priority to instruments which shall be first recorded, the title of a grantee of a deed which is recorded after the execution sale but before the recording of the evidence of title based on such sale is superior to that of the execution purchaser.⁵³ However, the sheriff's certificate of sale is an instrument within the meaning of such statutes, and when it is recorded the sheriff's deed subsequently delivered and recorded relates back thereto; hence where a deed to a third person is recorded after the recording of the certificate of sale but before the recording of the sheriff's deed, the title of the execution purchaser is superior.⁵⁴ The latter principle has been applied so as to make a purchaser who has paid the purchase price and received a certificate of sale a bona fide purchaser with full protection against claims of which he subsequently receives notice, regardless of whether he receives such notice before or after the execution of the sheriff's deed.⁵⁵ In jurisdictions where the object of recording is to impart notice to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees and not to creditors merely, and where an unrecorded deed or mortgage is superior to a judgment lien, the recording of a deed or mortgage subsequent to judgment and before the execution sale constitutes notice to the execution purchaser and prevents him from acquiring title superior to, or unaffected by, the recorded instrument.⁵⁶

Statutes giving judgment lien priority. Under some of the registry statutes giving a judgment lien priority as against any unrecorded instrument of which the judgment creditor had no knowledge at the time the judgment lien attached, an execution purchaser acquires a title superior to, and unaffected by, a deed or mortgage which is unrecorded at the time the judgment lien attached and of which the judgment creditor then had no notice, even though the execution purchaser before or at the sale acquires actual notice of the instrument,⁵⁷ or constructive notice by virtue of its recording before sale.⁵⁸ This is on the principle that, where the creditor's right has vested and he is entitled to priority over the unrecorded conveyance, the purchaser at the sale will be similarly entitled, since otherwise the creditor would be deprived of the advantage acquired.⁵⁹ The rule has been applied to equities of which the judgment creditor had no notice at the time his lien attached and of which the purchaser had notice at the time of sale, so as to protect the latter as a bona fide purchaser;⁶⁰ but the rule is not applicable to equities, liens, or resulting trusts which are not required to be recorded and hence are not within the application of the recording statute.⁶¹

e. Effect of Notice

An execution purchaser with notice is not a bona fide purchaser and he takes subject to all claims, legal or equitable, of which he has timely notice.

The effect of notice, actual or constructive, is to prevent the purchaser at the execution sale from being considered a bona fide purchaser with the rights, title, and protection belonging to and afforded a person holding that status.⁶² He takes subject to all claims, legal or equitable, which third persons may have on the property and of which he has timely notice,⁶³ such as liens or encumbrances,⁶⁴ equities,⁶⁵ resulting trusts,⁶⁶ prior sales, transfers, or contracts to sell,⁶⁷ and unrecorded instruments.⁶⁸

An execution purchaser who has notice of a mistake in a deed from the judgment debtor to a third person whereby certain land or an interest therein was omitted from the description by mistake, cannot recover, or assert a clear title to, the property so omitted.⁶⁹ Likewise, where a mortgage from the judgment debtor is insufficient in its description of the land, an execution purchaser who knows what land was intended to be mortgaged, takes subject to the mortgage.⁷⁰ A person who purchases at an execution sale with knowledge of the invalidity of the execution,⁷¹ or of the invalidity of, or irregularities in, the judgment⁷² is not an innocent purchaser. However, it has been held that notice of irregularities making the sale voidable does not affect the title where no fraud is shown.⁷³

§ 295. — Judgment Creditor or Attorney as Purchaser

A judgment creditor who purchases at the execution sale with notice is not a bona fide purchaser. The authorities have expressed contrary views regarding the status of a judgment creditor who purchases without actual notice.

A judgment creditor who purchases at the execution sale with actual timely notice of matters affecting the title,⁷⁴ or with notice of facts putting him on inquiry,⁷⁵ is not a bona fide purchaser.

The courts are divided on the question as to whether the judgment creditor who purchases at his own sale is affected by irregularities, liens, and equities of which he had no actual notice.⁷⁶ According to the doctrine prevailing in some jurisdictions he is not an innocent purchaser, but is chargeable with notice of all irregularities in the judgment, execution, and sale, and of all liens on, and equities subsisting against, the property in the hands of the judgment debtor.⁷⁷ At least this is so where

Statement of debtor that he owns no property

A statement of the judgment debtor that he owns no property made to the judgment creditor at the time of the contracting of the debt, which forms the basis of the judgment, is sufficient to put the judgment creditor on inquiry so that neither he nor his attorney on becoming a purchaser at the execution sale can properly claim to be a bona fide purchaser without notice.—Kinealy v. he merely credits the amount of his bid on the judgment.⁷⁸ The doctrine prevailing in other jurisdictions is that a judgment creditor purchasing at the execution sale stands in the same position as if he were a third person making the purchase; where he has no actual notice of prior irregularities or equities, or such constructive notice as would affect a third person purchasing, he is to be accorded the protection afforded a bona fide purchaser.⁷⁹ In these jurisdictions the courts apply the rule, unless there are equities of so strong and persuasive a nature as to prevent its application.⁸⁰

Under registry acts. Under the various registry acts providing that all deeds and title papers shall be in force and take effect from and after the time of filing the same for record and not before, as to all creditors and subsequent bona fide purchasers without notice, it is usually held that the judgment creditor purchasing the property at the execution sale will be protected against an unrecorded deed or mortgage of which he had no actual notice.⁸¹ Some courts reach the same conclusion where the statute does not extend protection to creditors as such but only to bona fide purchasers.⁸² It has been held that an execution creditor is a "purchaser in good faith" within the meaning of the statute without regard to whether he is a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration.⁸³ Some courts hold that a judgment creditor who purchases at the execution sale is not an innocent or bona fide purchaser within the meaning of the recording acts, and is not entitled to the protection afforded by such acts against unrecorded instruments.⁸⁴

The rule obtaining in some states that, where the judgment creditor has no actual notice, at the time his lien attaches, of an unrecorded instrument, subsequent notice to the execution purchaser is immaterial, discussed supra § 294, is applied by some courts in cases where the judgment creditor is the purchaser.⁸⁵ Of course, if he has notice before his lien attached he will not be protected.⁸⁶ Other courts decline to apply the rule where the execution creditor is the purchaser,⁸⁷ and hold that in such case he may be compelled in equity to relinquish the advantage which he secured.⁸⁸

Where attorney for judgment creditor purchases at the execution sale, he is not regarded as a bona fide purchaser.⁸⁹ He takes with notice of all ir-

Attorney as surety of purchaser

An attorney who admits that he recovered the judgment for the satisfaction of which the land was sold, and was present at the sale, was the surety of the purchaser in the sale bond, and must have known all about the manner of making the sale, is not an innocent purchaser without notice of the imperfection of regularities.⁹⁰ Some courts hold that he is chargeable only with notice of irregularities.⁹¹

§ 296. — Purchasers from Execution Purchasers

A purchaser with notice from a bona fide execution purchaser is protected as a bona fide purchaser, and such a bona fide purchaser is not affected by equities which might be set up against the property in the hands of the execution purchaser; but a purchaser with notice from one not a bona fide purchaser is not protected as a bona fide purchaser.

A purchaser with notice from a bona fide execution purchaser without notice is entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser.⁹² However, a purchaser with notice from one not a bona fide purchaser is not protected as a bona fide purchaser.⁹³

A bona fide purchaser from the purchaser at the execution sale is not affected by equities which might be set up against the property in the hands of such purchaser.⁹⁴ He acquires a good title where the execution sale is merely voidable,⁹⁵ as where the execution purchaser is one having no right to purchase because he is an officer or the like.⁹⁶ Even where the execution sale is voidable as against the purchaser of the execution purchaser on account of his knowledge of irregularities attending the sale, a person who purchases from him bona fide for value and without notice acquires a good title.⁹⁷ However, where there was no power to sell under the execution, as where the judgment was satisfied before the sale, a purchaser without notice from a purchaser with notice acquires no title.⁹⁸ He cannot claim the property as an innocent purchaser where he purchased with knowledge of fatal irregularities in the execution sale,⁹⁹ and that the sale had been set aside by the court because of such irregularities.¹

As in the case of the original execution purchaser, a purchaser from him must be deemed to have notice of facts shown by the public records.² The inadequacy of the bid at the execution sale cannot be invoked to destroy the title of a remote purchaser on the ground that it per se put him on notice.³

Purchasers from judgment creditor. If a judgment creditor purchasing at an execution sale is not regarded as a bona fide purchaser, see supra § 295, a party claiming under such judgment creditor is not an innocent purchaser, and acquires no better title than that of the judgment creditor,⁴ at least where he has notice of facts placing him on inquiry.⁵ However, where a judgment creditor was an innocent purchaser for value at his own execution sale, his transferee succeeds to his rights as innocent purchaser for value without notice,⁶ although such transferee himself had notice before or at the time of the purchase.⁷

§ 297. — Determination of Question of Bona Fides

The question as to whether an execution purchaser took with notice is one of fact for the jury, and a person claiming an interest in the property ordinarily has the burden of showing that the purchaser took with notice.

The question of whether the facts in evidence constitute notice to the purchaser is one of fact for the jury.⁸ A person claiming an interest in property sold on execution, such as a person claiming under a prior unrecorded deed or mortgage, has the burden of showing that the execution purchaser took with notice;⁹ but in the absence of an affirmative showing that the execution purchaser bought without notice and for value, all that the grantee under a recorded deed need show is that the deed was sufficient to pass title.¹⁰

Evidence has been held sufficient¹¹ or insufficient¹² to show that the execution purchaser or his successor had notice.

§ 298. Effect of Defects or Irregularities

No title passes to the purchaser where the proceedings under an execution are wholly void.

If the proceedings under an execution are wholly void, no title passes to the purchaser.¹³ However, where an execution is regular on its face, the purchaser at the sale cannot be injuriously affected by any irregularities in the proceedings which resulted in the sale, or in the sale, where not of such character as to render the proceedings wholly void.¹⁴

§ 299. — Relating to Judgment, Writ, or Levy

a. Relating to judgment

Presumption of good faith

In action by heirs to recover portion of wife's interest in land which had allegedly belonged to matrimonial community and which had been sold by sheriff to satisfy judgment obtained against husband for debt incurred after wife's death, where neither husband's nor wife's succession was ever opened, and fact that husband was married when he bought the land did not appear in deed or record, evidence would not overcome presumption that sheriff's sale purchaser and subsequent purchasers acted in good faith, notwithstanding statement attributed to sheriff's sale purchaser that he bought the land to help husband out of a tight place. —Long v. Chailan, 199 So. 222, 196 La. 380.

a. Relating to Judgment

That the judgment is voidable does not in general affect the title of an execution purchaser, but such a purchaser acquires no title under a void judgment.

The fact that the judgment is voidable, or may be set aside or reversed for errors prior to its rendition, does not affect the title of an execution purchaser¹⁵ in the absence of statute to that effect.¹⁶ On the other hand, if there are jurisdictional or other defects rendering the judgment void ab initio,¹⁷ or if there is no judgment as a basis for the execution,¹⁸ or if the lien of the judgment has expired where the sale is of real property,¹⁹ the purchaser acquires no title. Failure to register the judgment is not fatal in some jurisdictions.²⁰

20. Ala.—Howard v. Corey, 26 So. 682, 126 Ala. 283.

It is a general rule that the title of a bona fide purchaser is not affected by defects and irregularities in, or pertaining to, the writ of execution, such as defects in its contents or irregularities in its issuance or in the proceedings after judgment to obtain its issuance.²¹ Thus no mere irregularity in the indorsement of the writ, or clerical error in its recitals, which render it voidable only, will invalidate the title of a bona fide purchaser at a sale thereunder.²²

On the other hand, if the writ is void,²³ or the clerk had no right to issue it,²⁴ or the officer to whom the writ is directed or delivered has no authority to levy,²⁵ as where the writ does not direct or command him to levy,²⁶ the purchaser acquires no title. It has also been held that a purchaser acquires no title to property sold under a writ which is defective on its face because not in compliance with statutory requirements.²⁷

Delay in issuing writ. Where it is required that execution shall issue within a designated period after the rendition of judgment, its issuance after the expiration of such period without a revival by scire facias renders it voidable merely, and a sale thereunder will give a valid title to the purchaser;²⁸ but if the writ is dormant the sale is void and the judgment debtor may assert title.²⁹

Sale under several executions. Where property is sold under several executions, it is generally held that the title of the purchaser will be good if one of the executions is valid, although the others under which the property is sold are void.³⁰ Some authority, however, is to the contrary.³¹

c. Relating to Levy

As a general rule, mere irregularities in the levy of execution do not affect the title of an execution purchaser.

In some jurisdictions the rule is that there must be a valid levy as prescribed by statute in order to support the sheriff's deed, and that where such statutory levy is wanting the execution purchaser acquires no title.³² In other jurisdictions, however, while it is recognized that the levy must comply with the substantial requisites of the law in order that title may pass,³³ and that there may be some defects in the levy which will render the sale void and prevent the title from passing,³⁴ the general rule is that the title of the purchaser is not affected by irregularities in the levy with which he was not connected, such as failure of the officer to make a seizure of the property in the mode or by the steps prescribed by statute,³⁵ to attach a levy and inventory to the execution,³⁶ to make a demand of payment before levying the execution,³⁷ to abide by the debtor's selection of property to be levied on,³⁸ or to make demand on the debtor for property before selling.³⁹ Formal defects in the copy of the writ served on the debtor are not fatal;⁴⁰ and failure to record the levy, as provided by statute, is not fatal if no rights of third persons intervene.⁴¹

Excessive levy. It has been held that a levy which is excessive, see supra § 107, will not invalidate a sale thereunder;⁴² but according to some authorities if the levy is entirely out of proportion to the debt the purchaser acquires no title,⁴³ although this is so only in extreme cases.⁴⁴

Exhausting personalty before levy on land. According to some authorities the failure to exhaust personalty before levying on land, as required by statute, see supra § 100, will not invalidate the title of an innocent purchaser who has not been instrumental in causing the officer to violate the law,⁴⁵ although it has also been held that a sheriff's deed based on a return which fails to show that the personalty was insufficient to satisfy the judgment is void and conveys no title.⁴⁶

d. Relating to Appraisement

Irregularities in the appraisement do not affect the title of an execution purchaser, but, according to some authorities, a sale made without any appraisement passes no title.

Defects and irregularities in the appraisement do not affect the title of the execution purchaser.⁴⁷ However, it has been held that title does not pass under a sale made without any appraisement,⁴⁸ at least, under some circumstances,⁴⁹ although it has been held that title passes where there was a prior appraisement under other proceedings and the property sold for more than two thirds of its value under such appraisement.⁵⁰

§ 300. — Relating to Sale or Acts after Sale

Mere defects or irregularities relating to the sale or to acts after the sale do not ordinarily affect the title of the execution purchaser, but no title passes under a void sale.

Mere irregularities in the sale, or connected therewith, do not ordinarily affect the title of the execution purchaser,⁵¹ where not caused or induced by the purchaser.⁵² Failure of the officer to keep the property in his possession for the required length of time before sale is not fatal.⁵³ The fact that property was improperly sold en masse does not affect the title of the purchaser;⁵⁴ nor does failure to notify the judgment debtor of his right to select exempt property avoid the sale and the deed given thereunder.⁵⁵

On the other hand, the sale is void and vests no title in the purchaser where, contrary to statutory provisions, the sale is made at the first offering for less than the proper proportion of the appraised value of the property;⁵⁶ where a sale under process issued out of the court in question is prohibited by statute;⁵⁷ or where the officer making the sale is without authority to do so,⁵⁸ as where he has been restrained by injunction,⁵⁹ or where he sells under

A sale of personal property not in the possession of the officer or within the view of the bidders generally is void and confers no title on the purchaser;⁶¹ but there is authority holding that such sales are merely voidable.⁶²

Notice of sale. In most jurisdictions a mistake or defect in, or even failure to give, notice of sale does not render the sale void so as to invalidate the title of a bona fide purchaser,⁶³ but in other jurisdictions failure to give the statutory notice renders the sale void.⁶⁴

Stifling of bidding. If the purchaser stifles bidding, it has been held that the sale is voidable but not void;⁶⁵ but some courts have held that the purchaser will not be permitted to hold property so purchased.⁶⁶

Acts or omissions after sale. The title of the purchaser cannot be affected by delinquencies of the sheriff committed subsequent to the sale;⁶⁷ and failure to have the sale confirmed, even where required by statute, does not invalidate the purchaser's title.⁶⁸

- (2) Where purchaser is judgment creditor or his attorney, assignee, or vendee

(1) In General

The title of an execution purchaser who purchases before an appeal is taken or before the judgment is superseded or suspended is not impaired by the subsequent reversal or vacation of the judgment.

The title of an execution purchaser, and particularly of a bona fide purchaser who is a stranger to the suit, who purchases before an appeal is taken and before the judgment is superseded or suspended by giving a bond, is not impaired by the subsequent reversal of the judgment on appeal or its being set aside by the trial court on grounds which do not render the judgment absolutely void,⁶⁹ or for frauds, vices, or infirmities which do not appear on the face of the record, as appears supra § 293; and this rule has been applied where the judgment contained recitals of personal service of process, although in fact there was no service.⁷⁰ The rule has been affirmed by statute in some jurisdictions,⁷¹ but in other jurisdictions, under statutes relating to new trials, a new trial granted within a specified period of time for a particular cause is deemed a continuation of the original suit and defeats the title of the purchaser.⁷² If the judgment was reversed before levy and sale, no title passes to the purchaser,⁷³ and, where the judgment stands reversed at the time of sale, a subsequent affirmance does not aid the purchaser.⁷⁴

ceedings leading up to the judgment, his title will not be protected as against the execution debtor or his grantee.—Cottle v. Simon, 47 N.E. 815, 153 N.Y. 403, reversing 92 Hun 607.

Only right or remedy of execution debtor is to claim the proceeds of the sale.—Continental Securities Corporation v. Wetherbee, 175 So. 571, 187 La. 773—Jefferson v. Gamm, 90 So. 682, 150 La. 372.

which is excessive, see supra § 107, will not invalidate a sale thereunder;⁴² but according to some authorities if the levy is entirely out of proportion to the debt the purchaser acquires no title,⁴³ although this is so only in extreme cases.⁴⁴

Exhausting personalty before levy on land. According to some authorities the failure to exhaust personalty before levying on land, as required by statute, see supra § 100, will not invalidate the title of an innocent purchaser who has not been instrumental in causing the officer to violate the law,⁴⁵ although it has also been held that a sheriff's deed based on a return which fails to show that the personalty was insufficient to satisfy the judgment is void and conveys no title.⁴⁶

Irregularities in the appraisement do not affect the title of an execution purchaser, but, according to some authorities, a sale made without any appraisement passes no title.

Defects and irregularities in the appraisement do not affect the title of the execution purchaser.⁴⁷ However, it has been held that title does not pass under a sale made without any appraisement,⁴⁸ at least, under some circumstances,⁴⁹ although it has been held that title passes where there was a prior appraisement under other proceedings and the property sold for more than two thirds of its value under such appraisement.⁵⁰

§ 300. — Relating to Sale or Acts after Sale

Mere defects or irregularities relating to the sale or to acts after the sale do not ordinarily affect the title of the execution purchaser, but no title passes under a void sale.

Mere irregularities in the sale, or connected therewith, do not ordinarily affect the title of the execution purchaser,⁵¹ where not caused or induced by the purchaser.⁵² Failure of the officer to keep the property in his possession for the required length of time before sale is not fatal.⁵³ The fact that property was improperly sold en masse does not affect the title of the purchaser;⁵⁴ nor does failure to notify the judgment debtor of his right to select exempt property avoid the sale and the deed given thereunder.⁵⁵

On the other hand, the sale is void and vests no title in the purchaser where, contrary to statutory provisions, the sale is made at the first offering for less than the proper proportion of the appraised value of the property;⁵⁶ where a sale under process issued out of the court in question is prohibited by statute;⁵⁷ or where the officer making the sale is without authority to do so,⁵⁸ as where he has been restrained by injunction,⁵⁹ or where he sells under an execution directed to an officer of another jurisdiction.⁶⁰

A sale of personal property not in the possession of the officer or within the view of the bidders generally is void and confers no title on the purchaser;⁶¹ but there is authority holding that such sales are merely voidable.⁶²

Notice of sale. In most jurisdictions a mistake or defect in, or even failure to give, notice of sale does not render the sale void so as to invalidate the title of a bona fide purchaser,⁶³ but in other jurisdictions failure to give the statutory notice renders the sale void.⁶⁴

Stifling of bidding. If the purchaser stifles bidding, it has been held that the sale is voidable but not void;⁶⁵ but some courts have held that the purchaser will not be permitted to hold property so purchased.⁶⁶

Acts or omissions after sale. The title of the purchaser cannot be affected by delinquencies of the sheriff committed subsequent to the sale;⁶⁷ and failure to have the sale confirmed, even where required by statute, does not invalidate the purchaser's title.⁶⁸

Purchaser with notice

Where the purchase is made by a stranger and the circumstances of the case show that he is chargeable with notice of the facts and pro-

- (2) Where purchaser is judgment creditor or his attorney, assignee, or vendee

(1) In General

The title of an execution purchaser who purchases before an appeal is taken or before the judgment is superseded or suspended is not impaired by the subsequent reversal or vacation of the judgment.

The title of an execution purchaser, and particularly of a bona fide purchaser who is a stranger to the suit, who purchases before an appeal is taken and before the judgment is superseded or suspended by giving a bond, is not impaired by the subsequent reversal of the judgment on appeal or its being set aside by the trial court on grounds which do not render the judgment absolutely void,⁶⁹ or for frauds, vices, or infirmities which do not appear on the face of the record, as appears supra § 293; and this rule has been applied where the judgment contained recitals of personal service of process, although in fact there was no service.⁷⁰ The rule has been affirmed by statute in some jurisdictions,⁷¹ but in other jurisdictions, under statutes relating to new trials, a new trial granted within a specified period of time for a particular cause is deemed a continuation of the original suit and defeats the title of the purchaser.⁷² If the judgment was reversed before levy and sale, no title passes to the purchaser,⁷³ and, where the judgment stands reversed at the time of sale, a subsequent affirmance does not aid the purchaser.⁷⁴

ceedings leading up to the judgment, his title will not be protected as against the execution debtor or his grantee.—Cottle v. Simon, 47 N.E. 815, 153 N.Y. 403, reversing 92 Hun 607.

Only right or remedy of execution debtor is to claim the proceeds of the sale.—Continental Securities Corporation v. Wetherbee, 175 So. 571, 187 La. 773—Jefferson v. Gamm, 90 So. 682, 150 La. 372.

such action as defendant in the judgment may legally take to appeal and obtain a reversal.⁷⁵

Sale pending appeal. Except in some jurisdictions,⁷⁶ a reversal defeats the title of the purchaser where the sale was made pending the appeal,⁷⁷ especially where the judgment was suspended or superseded by the giving of a bond,⁷⁸ or where the purchaser had actual knowledge of the pending appeal.⁷⁹

(2) Where Purchaser Is Judgment Creditor or His Attorney, Assignee, or Vendee

The title acquired at an execution sale, where the purchaser is the execution creditor or one standing in his position, generally is not protected by a subsequent reversal or vacation of the judgment.

The policy of law which protects the title which a stranger acquires at an execution sale under a voidable judgment does not apply where the purchase is made by the execution creditor or one occupying his position, so that where an execution creditor bids in property at a sale under his own execution and the judgment is afterward set aside in the lower court or reversed on appeal, the former owner of the property or the execution debtor becomes entitled to restitution of the property and can recover it in an appropriate proceeding, since in such case the execution creditor has none of the equities of a bona fide purchaser.⁸⁰ It has been held, however, that restitution of the property itself, whether lands or goods, cannot be had; that the right is limited to the proceeds.⁸¹ Statutes providing that on reversal there shall be a restitution of the price for which the land was sold but that the land shall not be restored have been held applicable where the purchaser was the judgment creditor.⁸² Where the sale is based on two judgments, the fact that the judgment on the inferior claim is afterward reversed does not affect the validity of the sale even where the judgment creditor is the purchaser;⁸³ and where the judgment creditor purchases before notice of the appeal, and when the cause is remanded recovers again for the whole amount of the first judgment, he will be protected in his purchase, for in such case the recovery of the second judgment in effect declares that he is under no obligation to make restitution.⁸⁴

Under the practice in some jurisdictions by which the debtor's property or any interest or estate therein is set off or delivered to the creditor under a writ of elegit or an extent, the title to the property does not pass absolutely to the creditor, but depends on the continuance of the judgment;⁸⁵ and hence, where the judgment is subsequently reversed, the debtor thereupon becomes entitled to have the specific property or interest restored to him, and he may recover it not only where it remains in the hands of the creditor,⁸⁶ but where it has been sold to a third person, even though the third person is an innocent purchaser.⁸⁷

Purchase by execution creditor's attorney. Where the purchase at the sale was made by the execution creditor's attorney who conducted the proceedings culminating in the judgment and sale, the execution debtor may enforce restitution from the attorney, although the attorney purchased for his own benefit; in such a case the attorney is chargeable with notice and occupies no more favorable a position than the execution creditor.⁸⁸ A fortiori the attorney is not protected where the circumstances of the case show that in reality he purchased for the benefit of the execution creditor,⁸⁹ or was himself the beneficial plaintiff in the judgment.⁹⁰

Purchase by assignee of judgment. Where the judgment creditor assigns the judgment and the assignee procures an execution to be issued thereon and purchases the property at the sale, he is not protected as a bona fide purchaser on a subsequent reversal of the judgment, but must make restitution to the execution debtor,⁹¹ although there is some authority to the contrary.⁹²

Purchaser from execution creditor. Where the execution creditor, after purchasing at his own sale, the judgment not having been superseded by bond, sells the property to a third person who purchases for value and without notice, and the judgment is afterward reversed on appeal, it is held in some jurisdictions that the title of the purchaser is not affected by the reversal;⁹³ but the contrary is held in other jurisdictions.⁹⁴ Especially does the purchaser from the execution creditor lose his title on reversal where he purchases pending an appeal, although there is no supersedeas, since he is chargeable with notice.⁹⁵ At any event, a stranger thus purchasing from the execution creditor is not protected from the effects of the subsequent reversal of the judgment unless he occupies the position of a purchaser for value and without notice;⁹⁶ and in order to occupy this position he must acquire the legal title and pay the purchase money.⁹⁷

Where the execution creditor purchases at the sale and takes only a sheriff's certificate which he assigns, the assignee, on a subsequent reversal of the judgment, cannot hold the property as against the execution debtor;⁹⁸ but where the assignee of the certificate obtains the sheriff's deed before reversal of the judgment his title may be protected.⁹⁹

Remedies. Where the purchase at the execution sale was made by the execution creditor, his attorney, or assignee, it has been held that the former owner of the property or the execution debtor, on a reversal of the judgment, may compel restitution of the particular property, or may sue for damages¹ if the property cannot be restored to him.²

b. Modification

A modification of the judgment generally does not affect the title acquired by the purchaser at an execution sale.

Generally a modification of a judgment does not affect the purchaser's title at the execution sale,³ even though the execution creditor is the purchaser,⁴ unless, in the latter case, such modification or partial reversal is on so material a point or is so great in extent as to destroy the grounds for the sale or make it inequitable for the sale to stand.⁵ Thus, where the partial reversal or modification relates only to the amount, and the bid at which the property was purchased is less than the amount of the amended judgment, the sale will be permitted to stand, in the absence of other reasons for setting it aside, and the execution creditor's title will not be affected by the amendment, since not all ground for the sale has been destroyed.⁶

Amount of amended judgment less than amount bid. Where the modification of the judgment reduces the amount thereof below the amount for which the execution creditor has bid in the property, it has been held that the title which the execution creditor has acquired cannot be divested, but that he must pay to the execution debtor the difference between the reduced amount of the judgment and the amount of the bid,⁷ although it has also been declared that the execution creditor is not bound to pay to the execution debtor the difference between the amount of the bid and the amount of the judgment as reduced, but that the execution debtor is entitled to a vacation of the sale and a restitution of all the property purchased unless it appears that he would be prejudiced by pursuing this course instead of having payment of the excess.⁸

§ 302. Right to Possession

- a. In general
- b. Property subject to mortgage
- c. Taking possession by force

a. In General

An execution purchaser acquires only such right to possession of the property as the debtor had; he is entitled to possession of personal property when he has complied with the terms of sale and has made payment; on perfection of his title he has a right to possession of real property where the debtor was entitled to possession.

A purchaser at an execution sale acquires only such right to possession of the property as the execution debtor had.⁹

Personal property. The general rule is that the purchaser of personal property at an execution sale who has complied with the terms of the sale and has paid the amount of his bid is entitled to immediate possession of the property purchased.¹⁰ An exception to the rule exists where a rule to set aside the sale is pending.¹¹ Where the property is pledged, redemption from the pledge is necessary to entitle the purchaser to possession.¹² A change of possession is not necessary to the validity of the sale¹³ or to the passing of title.¹⁴

The purchaser has a reasonable time to remove the property,¹⁵ a reasonable time being deemed to be the time required to move the property with diligence in the ordinary manner of moving property of the same class.¹⁶ The act of the sheriff in delivering to the purchaser a key to the building or room where the property is kept, together with the acts of the purchaser in assuming control of and removing the property, constitute a delivery.¹⁷

An execution purchaser of fixtures as personal property who places a custodian in possession of them cannot thereby be deemed to be in possession of the real estate.¹⁸

Real property. Where the judgment debtor was entitled to possession, the execution purchaser of real property is entitled to possession immediately on the perfection of his title.¹⁹ The purchaser will not be put in possession where the execution debtor's title was in dispute and he was out of possession at the time of the sale;²⁰ nor is a purchaser entitled to possession of land which was not included in the execution sale.²¹ The purchaser of an estate in remainder is not entitled to possession until after the death of the tenant for life.²² Where only an undivided interest in the land is sold, the execution purchaser is only entitled to the right of possession to which the execution debtor was entitled, and his possession must therefore be that of a tenant in common or joint tenant.²³

The purchaser is not entitled to the possession of real property until the execution and delivery of the sheriff's deed, and his title will not support an action for such possession until then.²⁴ The mere purchase and certificate of sale alone either before or after the expiration of the redemption period

Where the property sold under execution is subject to a mortgage, the purchaser generally is entitled to possession only when the mortgagor had a right thereto.

Except as otherwise provided by statute,²⁷ where property sold under execution is subject to a mortgage, and the mortgagor has the right of possession until default, the execution purchaser of such property may recover possession thereof from the mortgagor or any one claiming under him before default.²⁸ Unless he is the mortgagee,²⁹ or except where the mortgagor is himself entitled to possession,³⁰ an execution purchaser of a mortgagor's equity of redemption only is not entitled to possession,³¹ and he has no such title to the property as will support an action of ejectment.³² Where land is conveyed and a mortgage taken back to secure support for life, and the interest of the mortgagor is afterward sold on execution, the purchaser's right of possession must be postponed until the mortgagee's rights are extinguished.³³

Where the mortgagee is in possession of the property, or has a right to the possession by reason of default in the mortgage, the execution purchaser cannot maintain ejectment, or any other action for the recovery of the property, until he has complied with the terms of the mortgage.³⁴

An execution purchaser entitled to possession may not take possession by force.

An execution purchaser who is entitled to possession and who cannot obtain possession peaceably is not justified in taking possession by force, but must bring ejectment or other appropriate action to recover possession.³⁵

The officer conducting the sale is sometimes authorized by statute to evict defendant, his heirs, or their tenants or assignees after the judgment, when they are in possession of the property,³⁶ although he is not authorized by virtue of such a statute to evict persons other than those falling within the class named therein.³⁷ On the other hand, a petitioner who does not show either title or possession in himself,³⁸ or who does not otherwise present a proper case,³⁹ is not entitled to have the officer restrained from proceeding under the statute.

§ 303. — During Period for Redemption

Under most, but not all, redemption statutes the purchaser is not entitled to possession during the redemption period; a tenant in possession under an unexpired lease is entitled to continue in possession during such period.

Under most of the statutes which give the execution debtor a designated period during which he is permitted to redeem his property from the sale, the purchaser is not entitled to the immediate possession of the property,⁴⁰ the right to such possession being in the judgment debtor, his assigns, or the person in possession at time of sale;⁴¹ but in some jurisdictions the purchaser has the right of possession during the time for redemption.⁴²

(1) When the officer issues a certificate of sale the execution purchaser is substituted for and acquires all of the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor to the property, subject to the right of redemption, and during the period of time allowed for redemption the possession of an assignee of the judgment debtor is that of a tenant at sufferance of the execution purchaser.

Tenant in possession. Under statutes so providing, a tenant in possession holding under an unexpired lease is entitled to continue in possession as against either the purchaser⁴³ or the judgment debtor⁴⁴ during the period of redemption. Manifestly the tenancy must be a lawful and valid one in order to come within the statute.⁴⁵

§ 304. Right to Rents and Profits

In the absence of statute, an execution purchaser is entitled to the rents and profits from the land from the time he would be entitled to possession of the premises if they were in possession of the debtor.

The common-law rule that a purchaser of land buys all that is growing on or issuing out of it, belonging to the vendor, unless specially exempted, including rent in money or in kind, accruing out of an unexpired term, applies to land sold at an execution sale; and, independent of statute, he is entitled to the rents from the time when he would be entitled to possession of the premises if they were in the possession of the debtor.⁴⁶ He does not, however, acquire any right to rent earned prior to such time, although by the terms of the lease payable afterward.⁴⁷ Unless otherwise provided by statute, where the purchaser becomes entitled to possession only on receiving a sheriff's deed, the right to rents and profits dates from that time.⁴⁸

Where the purchaser is not entitled to possession during the period allowed for redemption, see supra § 303, he is not entitled to rent during such period in the absence of a statute so providing;⁴⁹ but under some statutory provisions the purchaser is entitled to the rents and profits accruing from the date of sale.⁵⁰ A statute authorizing a recovery of rent, from the time of the sale, from "the tenant in possession" has been held not applicable where the judgment debtor remains in possession,⁵¹ but there is authority to the contrary.⁵² In some jurisdictions a purchaser may recover the rents and profits from the party in possession accruing between the sale and the expiration of the redemption period, even where the property is redeemed at the expiration of that period,⁵³ while in others the execution purchaser is given a right of action for the rents and profits during the redemption period against the judgment debtor only, and then only in case he fails to redeem at the expiration of the redemption period.⁵⁴ Where an agreement

Effect of possession by mortgagee

Where mortgaged property subject to judgment lien was conveyed to beneficiary under trust deed in consideration of release from liability for payment of any deficiency remaining on note after exhaustion of security, judgment creditor who purchased the property at sheriff's execution sale was entitled to rents until sale of property under trust deed, since beneficiary under trust deed had possession of property, not by virtue of trust deed, but by virtue of transfer of property in consideration of release.—Carpenter v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 45 P.2d 1033, 7 Cal.App.2d 309.

In Washington

(1) Under a statute providing that the execution purchaser until redemption is entitled to receive the rents from the tenant in possession and that any rents so received shall be a credit on the redemption money to be paid, the only rights acquired by the purchaser are to protect, care for, and, in a proper case, to operate the property during the period of redemption, and if he has received any rents or profits from the property during such period and there is a redemption, he must, in an appropriate action, account to redeemer for such rents and profits, over and above the cost of operating, caring for and protecting the property.—Gray v. C. A. Harris & Son, 93 P.2d 385, 200 Wash. 181.

(2) As the actual date of redemption and consequently the period for which purchaser is entitled to recover rent cannot be known in advance, the purchaser is not entitled to recover rent in advance even though by the terms of lease it is so payable.—Byers v. Rothschild, 39 P. 688, 11 Wash. 296.

between the execution purchaser and the judgment debtor confers on the debtor the right to redeem, he is chargeable with rent for the period of time he has possession and use of the property after the sale.⁵⁵ Under some provisions the right to rent dates from the confirmation of the sale;⁵⁶ under other provisions the adjudication carries to the purchaser of land at sheriff's sale the immovable and all its appurtenances, including its fruits pending the seizure, in the control or possession of the sheriff at the date of the adjudication.⁵⁷

Procedure. Where the purchaser is entitled to the rent, he may recover it in a direct action therefor,⁵⁸ or by summary proceedings where provided for by statute.⁵⁹ Since the right to rents during the redemption period is based on statute and not on title or right of possession, rent for that period cannot be recovered as mesne profits in ejectment.⁶⁰

If the purchaser of standing timber has entered into possession he may sue for profits lost by the interference of the landowner, without first establishing title at law.⁶¹

§ 305. Rights as to Waste

An execution purchaser generally may prevent waste during the redemption period or recover damages therefor after the expiration of such period.

Except in some jurisdictions,⁶² an execution purchaser has such an interest in the land purchased as will authorize the maintenance of an action to prevent waste during the period allowed by law for redemption.⁶³ After the expiration of the period of redemption, in case no redemption was made, he may maintain an action to recover damages;⁶⁴ but in some jurisdictions he cannot recover damages for waste before confirmation of the sale and delivery of the sheriff's deed.⁶⁵ To bring a case within these rules there must, of course, be waste⁶⁶ and it must be properly alleged and proved.⁶⁷

The purchaser cannot recover for waste committed prior to the purchase;⁶⁸ and, where the life estate of the debtor is set off to the execution creditor, he can recover damages only for such acts as impair his enjoyment of the life estate.⁶⁹

§ 306. Rights of Purchaser on Avoidance of Sale or Failure of Title

An execution creditor purchasing at his own sale may obtain cancellation of the satisfaction thereof and the issuance of a new execution if no title is acquired by the purchase; but such relief may not be obtained where there is only a partial failure of title or where he had notice of the defect.

An execution creditor purchasing at his own sale may obtain a cancellation of the satisfaction thereof and the issuance of a new execution if no title is acquired by the purchase.⁷⁰ In some jurisdictions such right is conferred by express statutory enactments,⁷¹ and is not limited to the execution creditor purchasing at his own sale.⁷² However, the satisfaction will not be set aside, in the absence of fraud, where there is a failure of title as to only part of the parcels of land purchased.⁷³ If the execution creditor purchases with notice of the defect of title, he cannot be remitted to his judgment lien.⁷⁴ The satisfaction may be set aside on motion instead of resorting to an action.⁷⁵ in the absence of special circumstances making it inequitable to permit him to thus defeat the purchaser's title.⁷⁷

§ 307. — Reimbursement or Other Relief in General

- a. In general
- b. Amount of reimbursement

a. In General

As a general rule an execution purchaser is entitled to reimbursement in case of total failure of title, or as a condition to recovery of the property by the execution debtor.

While the doctrine of caveat emptor has its legitimate force and effect in precluding any idea of a warranty by defendant in execution, or by the sheriff who sells the property under an execution in his hands, as appears supra § 287, yet, except in some jurisdictions,⁷⁸ it has no application where a purchaser acquires no title to the property sold, and the purchaser is entitled to relief in appropriate proceedings therefor.⁷⁹ This is true even where the judgment creditor is the purchaser,⁸⁰ unless he purchases with notice of lack of title⁸¹ or unless the sale is void by reason of irregularities in the judgment or proceedings and the jurisdiction is one in which he is charged by law with notice of such irregularities.⁸² However, no relief is obtainable by the purchaser where there is only a partial failure of title.⁸³

A purchaser praying relief on the ground that the property belongs to a stranger must make out a clear case; doubt and uncertainty as to the interest of the execution defendant will not entitle him to relief.⁸⁴ Where a sale is set aside or a resale is had, the purchaser is entitled to reimbursement of the money paid by him.⁸⁵ If land has been irregularly sold under an execution and the debtor has the sale set aside on the ground of irregularity and has paid off the judgment against him, the court may, on motion of the purchaser, set aside the credit on the judgment to the extent of his bid and order a resale of the land for the purpose of indemnifying him unless the debtor himself reimburses the purchaser.⁸⁶ A bond for the purchase price may be annulled or quashed on the setting aside of the sale⁸⁷ or on the eviction of the purchaser.⁸⁸ To entitle the purchaser to a rescission he must tender back the property within a reasonable time, or offer a good and sufficient reason for not making the tender.⁸⁹

Reimbursement as condition to recovery of property. The purchaser is entitled to be reimbursed as a condition to recovery of the property by the execution debtor.⁹⁰ Exceptions to the rule exist where the judgment is void;⁹¹ where the purchaser was guilty of fraud or collusion in the purchase;⁹² where the purchaser's claim for reimbursement is barred by limitations;⁹³ and where the purchase price was paid by a person other than the purchaser.⁹⁴ However, even though the case falls within one of the exceptions so that the purchaser is not entitled to be reimbursed for the purchase price paid by him, where the action is an equitable one and it appears that the judgment against the execution debtor has been paid and satisfied, he should refund to the purchaser the amount of the judgment with interest.⁹⁵ It has been held that ejectment may be maintained against the purchaser without tendering the amount paid by the purchaser while in possession to the commonwealth to obtain a patent for the land, whatever remedy the purchaser may have for recovery in some other form

If the real owner of property sold as belonging to the execution debtor sues to recover it, it is not a condition precedent to the right of recovery that the purchaser be repaid his bid.⁹⁷ Where recovery is had by part owners of the land for their respective interests only, they are bound to return to the purchaser only that portion of the price paid by him which corresponds to their proportionate interests in the land.⁹⁸

b. Amount of Reimbursement

An execution purchaser entitled to reimbursement on failure of title generally may recover the purchase price paid, plus interest and certain expenditures, such as those for taxes and repairs, less rents and profits received. Ordinarily he may also recover compensation for improvements made.

On failure of title in the execution purchaser the measure of recovery is not the value of the property⁹⁹ but the amount of the purchase price paid¹ together with interest,² reimbursement for services performed in connection with the property,³ sums paid for necessary repairs,⁴ taxes⁵ and insurance,⁶ or to satisfy other claims against the property,⁷ less the rents and profits that the purchaser received or might have received in the exercise of ordinary diligence.⁸

afterward appears that the property was not subject to sale, the execution purchaser cannot have the encumbrance enforced against the property.⁹

Compensation for improvements. Where the owner of property seeks aid in a court of equity against a bona fide holder of an invalid title under a void execution sale, equitable relief will not be granted except upon the terms of compensation for improvements made on the premises in ignorance or mistake as to the title.¹⁰ However, the purchaser cannot recover for improvements where the rents of which he was in receipt largely exceeded the value of such improvements;¹¹ nor is he entitled to compensation for improvements made by his tenant,¹² but only for those which he has paid or is liable to pay.¹³

§ 308. — Recourse to Officer or Parties

On failure of title an execution purchaser generally may recover the purchase price from the officer if the funds are still in his hands; he may recover from the execution debtor or creditor in some jurisdictions, but not in others.

In case of failure of title, or where the sale is set aside on account of irregularities in the proceedings which render it void, a bona fide purchaser is entitled to recover the purchase price from the officer,¹⁴ if the funds are still in his hands,¹⁵ but not otherwise.¹⁶ However, it has been held that there is no implied promise by the sheriff at an execution

Retention of amount for expenses of sale

In case a recovery is permitted the officer will not be allowed to retain an amount necessary to cover the expenses of the sale.—Bowne v. O'Brien, 5 Daly, N.Y., 474.

16. Absence of fraud or misrepresentation

Purchaser at sale under execution was bound by doctrine of caveat emptor and could not recover from officer purchase money paid him and turned over to plaintiff in execution, on ground that levy was excessive, in absence of actual fraud or misrepresentation by officer, although sale was declared void and officer's deed canceled, in action in which purchaser was party.—Brady v. Smotherman, 180 S.E. 862, 51 Ga. App. 480.

sale to refund the purchase money on the purchaser being evicted.¹⁷

Recovery from debtor. In some jurisdictions it is held that, where a third person purchases at an execution sale property to which the debtor has no title, or where the title otherwise fails, the purchaser, if he has paid his bid and the transaction has been completed, may recover from the debtor the amount in which the debtor's indebtedness has been discharged.¹⁸ The rule is applicable, although no fraud is imputed to the debtor.¹⁹ In other jurisdictions it is held that in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation the purchaser is not entitled, either at law or in equity, to any relief as against the debtor.²⁰ In any event the execution debtor is not liable in an action of deceit for failure to disclose defects in the property sold.²¹ The purchaser cannot sue the execution debtor for money had and received on the ground that the debtor concealed from the purchaser the true condition of the property.²²

In some states, where the execution creditor is the purchaser, it is held that a court of equity may decree that the debtor pay to the creditor the amount credited on the execution.²³ In other jurisdictions the right to relief, either at law or in equity, is denied.²⁴ Where plaintiff in execution purchases the property and the title proves bad, the law raises no assumpsit in the debtor to make good the sum lost by the purchaser;²⁵ but where the execution creditor is the purchaser, and the title fails because of a fraudulent transfer by the debtor, and the sale satisfies the judgment, the creditor may recover from the debtor the price bid.²⁶

Recovery from creditor. In a number of jurisdictions it is the rule that a purchaser at a sale under a valid judgment cannot recover the amount paid by him in satisfaction of the bid from the execution creditor, on failure of title,²⁷ especially where the purchaser had knowledge at the time of sale of the defect in title.²⁸ Some courts apply this rule where the creditor merely pursued his legal remedy without directing in any way the acts of the officer,²⁹ but not where he directed and controlled the levy and the acts of the officer.³⁰ In other jurisdictions a recovery is allowed,³¹ sometimes by force of express statutory provisions.³² These statutes contain various limitations, some being applicable only on a sale of real estate,³³ and others being applicable only where the fact that the judgment was not a lien on the property purchased was unknown to the purchaser.³⁴

If a sale is void for the reason that it is founded on a void judgment, one who purchased at the sale without knowledge of such invalidity can recover from the judgment creditor, if he has received it,

§ 309. Remedies of Purchasers

- a. In general
- b. Proof of title

a. In General

Purchasers at execution sales are entitled to recover the property by due process of law, unless the property is peaceably relinquished.

Purchasers of realty at execution sales must recover possession of the property by due process of law, unless the property be peaceably relinquished.³⁶ The actions or proceedings available or necessary for the purchaser to adopt to obtain possession are discussed infra § 310. A purchaser of a debtor's undivided interest in land may maintain a bill for the partition of the land.³⁷

b. Proof of Title

As against the execution defendant it is generally sufficient for the purchaser to show a valid judgment, execution, sale, and sheriff's deed. Where the action is against one other than the execution debtor it is necessary to show that the execution defendant had title.

It is sufficient for the purchaser or a party claiming under him to show a valid judgment, execution, sale, and sheriff's deed.³⁸ If such facts are shown, a prima facie case is made.³⁹ These rules obtain where the action is against the execution defendant;⁴⁰ but, as stated infra this section, where the action is against a person other than the execution debtor it must also be shown that the execution defendant had title. A sale must be shown,⁴¹ but it may be proved either by the sheriff's deed or a return of the fieri facias.⁴² To permit a writ of assistance, ownership or right to possession must have been fully determined.⁴³ Except in some jurisdictions⁴⁴ a return by the officer need not be shown.⁴⁵ A deed must be shown.⁴⁶ It is not sufficient merely to introduce the sheriff's deed in evidence;⁴⁷ it is necessary to show a judgment⁴⁸ and execution.⁴⁹ In other words, the judgment and execution must be proved independently of the recitals in the sheriff's deed.⁵⁰ Under some circumstances, however, it is not necessary to prove the judgment.⁵¹ It is held in some cases that a levy must also be shown,⁵² but there is authority expressly to the contrary.⁵³ At any rate, after the lapse of thirty years, a valid levy of a lost execution on land is sufficiently shown by the execution docket, showing issuance of the execution, and the sheriff's deed, reciting the levy and sale.⁵⁴ If the execution is based on the transcript of a judgment of a justice of the peace, the preliminary facts necessary to warrant the filing of the transcript must appear.⁵⁵ Some courts hold that, where a transcript is filed, the judgment of the justice and the execution thereon need not be shown,⁵⁶ but other courts hold that it must be proved that an execution was issued by the justice and a proper return made thereon.⁵⁷ The recitals in the deed are not conclusive but may be attacked by defendant.⁵⁸ The proof must be clear and satisfactory.⁵⁹ It has been held that the purchaser must show that all the statutory requirements have been strictly complied with.⁶⁰

Proof of title of debtor. The purchaser must show that defendant in execution had some interest or estate in the land sold on which the judgment could operate,⁶¹ or at least possession since the rendition of the judgment.⁶² The rule applies where the opposing party is a person other than the judgment debtor,⁶³ but there is no necessity for proving title in defendant where the action is against the judgment debtor.⁶⁴ Proof of title need not be made where it is not put in issue by the pleadings.⁶⁵ It is not necessary for the purchaser to deduce a regular chain of title subsisting in the execution debtor, since it is sufficient if he shows a legal title in defendant at the time of the rendition of the judgment.⁶⁶

a. Form of remedy

- b. Defenses
- c. Limitations and laches
- d. Conditions precedent
- e. Parties
- f. Pleading
- g. Evidence
- h. Trial and judgment

a. Form of Remedy

The purchaser may have various remedies, such as ejectment, forcible entry and detainer, replevin, or such other statutory remedies as may have been provided. In a proper case his remedy is by bill in equity.

A proper remedy of a purchaser of property sold under execution to secure possession thereof is ejectment,⁶⁷ or forcible entry and detainer,⁶⁸ or replevin.⁶⁹ In several jurisdictions there are statutes providing for the recovery of the possession of property purchased at an execution sale by summary proceedings.⁷⁰ A statutory remedy for obtaining possession may be merely cumulative of the common-law remedies, so that resort may be had to either at the election of the purchaser.⁷¹ A writ of entry is, as shown in the title Entry, Writ of, § 6, sometimes an appropriate remedy, as is a writ of assistance.⁷² The purchaser is ordinarily entitled to immediate possession which he may obtain by a writ of possession.⁷³ A writ of possession is properly refused a purchaser of property at an execution sale where the execution of such writ would require the sheriff to dispossess one holding under a valid independent title.⁷⁴ Unlawful detainer is not the proper remedy of a plaintiff, relying solely on title acquired as purchaser at an execution sale, against one in possession under claim of title.⁷⁵ Action of warranty against debtor, where purchaser is evicted by a better title in a third person, arises only on a sale legally made.⁷⁶

Where a purchaser has secured only an equitable title at the execution sale, his proper remedy is a bill in equity and not an action at law.⁷⁷ He cannot recover in ejectment,⁷⁸ except in those jurisdictions where, as considered in Ejectment § 20, an equitable title will support ejectment. However, under the statutes of some states, the summary remedy provided thereby is available to an execution purchaser of an equitable title,⁷⁹ carrying with it the right to possession.⁸⁰ A court of equity has power to appoint a receiver until possession can be obtained by legal proceedings.⁸¹ A bill in equity is not an appropriate remedy to test the validity of a deed made by the judgment debtor, since the purchaser has an adequate remedy at law.⁸²

b. Defenses

Various matters of defense may be interposed. In general, the original defendant may not set up title in a third person where he is in possession of the property, but title not obtained from the execution debtor is a good defense where a third person is defendant.

Where the purchaser sues to recover possession, the defenses which may be set up depend, at least in part, on whether defendant is the execution debtor or a third person. A statutory defense is not available where the facts take the case out of the statute.⁸³ An option given the debtor to repurchase is no defense where the option has expired without being acted upon.⁸⁴ It is no defense that the purchase money was not paid where the officer indorsed payment on the writ, the judgment creditor does not claim that he was not paid, and the judgment debtor received credit for the purchase money.⁸⁵ A mere claim falls short of being an equitable defense.⁸⁶ Matters of defense may be waived.⁸⁷

Want of title. The general rule is that, in an action by the execution purchaser against the original defendant in possession of the property, the latter cannot set up title in a third person;⁸⁸ nor can he dispute the purchaser's title to the property.⁸⁹ Likewise a party claiming under the execution defendant who was in actual possession of the property at the time of the rendition of the judgment is estopped from denying the title of the purchaser;⁹⁰ but tenants in possession of the land may show in defense that they hold as tenants under a prior purchaser by a bona fide conveyance.⁹¹ The debtor is not estopped to set up a title subsequently acquired,⁹² but the debtor cannot set up title under

(1) Where judgment creditor purchased, at execution sale, realty which was purportedly encumbered so that creditor could obtain only a lien which would not entitle creditor to possession, creditor was nevertheless entitled to maintain suit for writ of possession, under statutory provision that, if judgment debtor sold encumbered realty under equitable title, court shall subject it to payment of judgment debt as though there had been a return of no property found, and providing for proceedings to determine equitable rights of the parties.—McCormack v. Moore, 117 S.W.2d 952, 273 Ky. 724.

(2) A party holding a mortgage on land is not entitled to its possession under writ of habere facias possessionem, since, under the statute, the purchaser at an execution sale of encumbered property obtains only a lien thereon subject to prior liens which he must enforce by action by making prior lienholders parties.—Whitaker v. Holcomb, 276 S.W. 973, 210 Ky. 836.

Purchaser acquires right to defendant's possession

When the sheriff sells the land of a defendant in a judgment, who is in possession, he cannot make any defense against the purchaser, as the latter acquires a right to the defendant's possession at least which will support ejectment against him.—Salada v. Mock, 114 A. 652, 271 Pa. 212.

a lease taken by him from a third person after levy of execution.⁹³ Where defendant is one who had conveyed the property to the judgment debtor prior to the sale, by warranty deed, he is estopped to assert any title.⁹⁴ Title not obtained from the execution debtor is a defense, where a third person is defendant,⁹⁵ but not where it was the result of a fraudulent collusion between him and the former owner to defeat the effect of the sheriff's sale.⁹⁶

Property not subject to execution. The judgment debtor, or a person claiming under him, may successfully defend an action by the purchaser for the possession of property by showing that defendant's interest or estate in the property was not subject to, or was exempt from, execution, unless the right of exemption has been expressly or impliedly waived.⁹⁷ Where only part of the property is exempt, the execution purchaser may recover the residue.⁹⁸

Irregularities in proceedings. The general rule is that the execution debtor, or a third person in possession of the property, cannot set up as a defense in an action for the recovery thereof irregularities in the judgment, execution, or sale,⁹⁹ unless the purchaser is chargeable with notice of the irregularity.¹ The sale cannot be attacked except for reasons rendering it absolutely void.² The judgment debtor or those claiming under him may defend by showing that the judgment,³ execution,⁴ or levy⁵ is void. Where the judgment is valid, the judgment debtor may be estopped by his conduct and that of his counsel at the time of the sale from contesting the validity of the execution on the ground that it was not actually signed by the proper officer.⁶

c. Limitations and Laches

A purchaser may lose his rights by laches or be barred from enforcing them by limitations.

Where the purchaser at an execution sale sleeps on his rights for a long period of time and fails to take the statutory steps necessary to obtain possession of the property, he will be presumed to have abandoned any right he might have acquired by virtue of the sale,⁷ and the courts will refuse aid to the purchaser as against bona fide purchasers in the interim.⁸ The statutes in some of the states require the action for possession to be brought within a designated period after the delivery of the sheriff's deed, under penalty of forfeiture of all rights under the sale.⁹ Limitations do not begin to run against the purchaser until the delivery of the sheriff's deed.¹⁰

d. Conditions Precedent

Conditions precedent must be complied with. Demand for possession must be made where required.

Plaintiff may be precluded from suing before performance of certain conditions.¹¹ In some jurisdictions or under some statutes the purchaser at

Habere facias possessionem

The county court, on a sale of lands under an execution, ought not to issue a writ of habere facias possessionem, under Act 1825 c 103, where, after the return of the execution, it does not appear from the record that notice was given to the tenant in possession to show cause why the writ of habere should not issue; and the fact that an injunction has been granted in favor of the tenant against the issuance of the writ is no bar to a motion to vacate the same after the injunction has been dissolved.—Waters v. Duvall, 6 Gill & J., Md., 76.

an execution sale may sue without making a previous demand for possession, or giving a previous notice to quit to the party in possession,¹² while in others a demand is necessary.¹³ The demand for possession may be made by the execution purchaser in person or by his authorized agent.¹⁴ In some jurisdictions the statutes giving a summary remedy to the execution purchaser for the recovery of the property require that a notice of the proceeding must be served personally upon defendant, or the person or persons in possession under him by titles derived from him subsequently to the judgment.¹⁵ Apart from statutory provisions, notice in such proceedings is sometimes required by the courts.¹⁶ The notice should be in writing¹⁷ and be served personally on the parties entitled thereto a designated period of time prior to the institution of proceedings.¹⁸ Where the notice takes the place of a petition, it should state facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded.¹⁹ The contents are sufficient if they follow the statutory form,²⁰ but a notice which fails to show everything required by the statute is insufficient.²¹ It is not necessary to allege in so many words that petitioner is the owner of the property,²² or to follow the form in an action of ejectment.²³ The sufficiency of the notice cannot be complained of by persons who come into the case by petition, claiming an interest in the land, and who, on issues formed on their petition, are defeated.²⁴ Lack of notice may be waived by appearance.²⁵ Regardless of whether or not notice is necessary, where it is given and defendant is thus brought into court, he has a right to resist a recovery by plaintiff.²⁶

ecution purchaser of the interest of a vendee under a contract of purchase does not acquire title unless he can show performance, or tender of performance, of the terms of the contract. However, tender of the unpaid purchase money is not a condition precedent to an action of ejectment by him under some circumstances, as where defendant sets up an absolute title against him, rather than a claim for the unpaid purchase money,²⁷ or where possession has been obtained by the holder of the legal title under circumstances which constitute a fraud on the other creditors of the execution debtor.²⁸

In general actions may be maintained by the purchaser or any one claiming under him, against the judgment debtor or such others as may be necessary parties to the proceeding which is brought for the recovery of the property.

The general rule is that under statutes allowing summary proceedings for the recovery of the possession of property sold under execution, or in real action therefor, such proceedings or action may be maintained by the purchaser or any person claiming under him,²⁹ and may be maintained against the judgment debtor in possession, his representatives, and parties in possession under him, who took possession subsequent to the lien of the judgment.³⁰ Summary proceedings cannot be maintained against a person holding adversely.³¹ The grantee of the execution purchaser may present a petition for a statutory writ of possession,³² but it is held that he cannot maintain a writ of entry in his own name.³³ Forceful entry and detainer may be maintained by an execution purchaser of the interests of a lessor against the assignees of the lessee.³⁴

The remedy, as given by some statutes, is not available to a grantee of the execution purchaser against a person holding under a title derived from the same person under whom the judgment debtor claimed title.³⁵ Summary proceedings may be had against a tenant in common before partition.³⁶ If the action is against the execution debtor, his landlord may be admitted to defend with him.³⁷ Where the wife of the debtor has an interest in the property, she is a proper defendant.³⁸ Where a writ of habere facias possessionem is sought, a petition of infants, claiming the land through inheritance, to be made parties, should not be rejected since their rights should be determined in the proceedings.³⁹

Plaintiff must allege everything necessary to entitle him to the relief sought; and defendant must plead properly such matters as he may wish to rely on in defense of the action.

Plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to entitle him to the relief demanded.⁴⁰ He must allege that the land was subject to execution.⁴¹ Some courts hold that in summary proceedings against a third person it must be alleged that he took possession under title derived from the judgment debtor,⁴² but other courts hold that an express allegation to this effect is unnecessary, it being sufficient to allege that defendant came into possession under the execution debtor.⁴³ Under some statutes providing for the issuance of citation on petition of the purchaser, the petition must be verified by the petitioner, and not by his attorney.⁴⁴ Where defendant in proceedings for possession seeks to rely on an antecedent lease his answer must comply with the statutory provisions if it is to be sufficient.⁴⁵ Where defendant was an unsuccessful claimant, it is proper to strike from the answer matter which should have been put in issue in the claim case.⁴⁶ Under some statutes the defense to a summary proceeding need not be pleaded in writing;⁴⁷ and the issue is sufficiently joined by a statement of defense without further pleading.⁴⁸ If, however, the parties choose to proceed by pleadings the case should be treated as though written pleadings were required.⁴⁹ Where plaintiff alleges title and ownership generally, and defendant denies such title and ownership, the existence of a judgment on which execution issued as a foundation for the sheriff's sale at which plaintiff claiming the land became the purchaser is put in issue.⁵⁰

The general rules of evidence require plaintiff to prove by proper and sufficient evidence matters essential to his recovery, and defendant has the burden of establishing any affirmative defense which he sets up.

The burden of proof is on plaintiff,⁵¹ but, where defendant sets up affirmative defenses, the burden is on him.⁵² To obtain a writ of habere facias possessionem plaintiff must show a conveyance to him of the property sold on execution by the sheriff.⁵³ The evidence must be within the pleadings and issues.⁵⁴ For a judgment and execution to be admissible, they must appear to have some bearing on the question of the title or of the right of possession as between the parties.⁵⁵ The judgment roll in the original action is admissible,⁵⁶ as are also the original execution⁵⁷ and the return of the officer.⁵⁸ It has been held that copies of the writ and return are admissible.⁵⁹ At any rate, on a showing of the loss or destruction of original records, secondary evidence of their contents is admissible.⁶⁰ Where the sheriff's deed is accompanied by an exemplification of a valid judgment and proof of the loss of the execution, the deed is admissible as evidence of title.⁶¹ Plaintiff, being a purchaser at the execution sale, may show that the execution debtor was in actual possession of the property at the time of the levy and sale, from which possession title will be presumed.⁶² Plaintiff may introduce deeds to the execution debtor, to show the title of the debtor.⁶³ In an action to recover possession of property sold on execution which had previously been conveyed by the judgment debtor, evidence that such conveyance was fraudulent and void is admissible.⁶⁴ Receipts of payments are admissible on behalf of defendant who claims the property as her separate estate,⁶⁵ and a receipt for the amount bid at the sale is admissible.⁶⁶

h. Trial and Judgment

The general rules as to trial and judgment apply to actions or proceedings by purchasers to obtain possession of the property.

In summary proceedings, adverse titles cannot be tried.⁶⁷ On a trial before a jury, questions of fact may and should be referred to the jury for determination⁶⁸ under proper instructions by the court.⁶⁹ Questions of law are, of course, for the court.⁷⁰ A statutory summary proceeding may⁷¹ and should⁷² be decided by the court without the intervention of a jury; but the court substantially complies with the law by giving a peremptory instruction to the jury.⁷³

A judgment on a motion for a writ of habere facias possessionem must be supported by the pleadings.⁷⁴ The purchaser should not be awarded possession of more land than he purchased at the execution sale.⁷⁵ The relief granted may be based on conditions.⁷⁶ Where allowed by statute, damages for the wrongful detention of the property are properly included in the verdict of the jury,⁷⁷ but may not be assessed by the court.⁷⁸ It is not error for the jury to find, and the court to render judgment for, a gross sum as costs.⁷⁹ So long as the judgment remains in force it is conclusive as to the right of possession of the property involved.⁸⁰ The court may in its discretion direct the judgment to be opened and defendant allowed to plead a defense of which he was unaware before the judgment.⁸¹ A judgment dispossessing defendant in execution is not invalidated because the rule nisi was issued in a county other than the one wherein the land lay, where the petition and rule were duly filed in the proper court and the judgment was had in the proper court.⁸² A judgment awarding the purchaser a writ of possession where land is encumbered by a mortgage is not void where the ex-

§ 311. — Actions to Quiet or Try Title

- a. Quieting title
- b. Trespass to try title

a. Quieting Title

The execution purchaser may, in a proper case, maintain an action to quiet title.

An execution purchaser may maintain an action to quiet title,⁸⁴ unless the case falls within a statute providing another remedy which is deemed exclusive.⁸⁵ Such action may be maintained even though the interest acquired by the purchaser is subject to a right of redemption.⁸⁶ Where the statute so provides, the purchaser may quiet title by suit after the expiration of time for redemption, although no deed has been issued.⁸⁷ Where actual possession is required in order to maintain a bill to quiet title, plaintiff's allegations must disclose actual possession at the time when the action was instituted.⁸⁸ Plaintiff has the burden of defeating defendant's title, where his own is not of record,⁸⁹ and the execution purchaser must show, as against a stranger to the judgment, that the judgment debtor had title or possession on the date of the execution sale.⁹⁰ Matters immaterial to the issue cannot be tried.⁹¹ The usual rules of evidence apply.⁹² Relief will be refused where plaintiff is guilty of laches,⁹³ or where defendant is a bona fide purchaser from the debtor,⁹⁴ or where there is an adequate remedy at law.⁹⁵ In a suit to quiet title, where the judgment creditor was not a bona fide purchaser, equity will do complete justice and protect the rights of one who had advanced most of the purchase price paid for the land involved.⁹⁶

The purchaser at an execution sale may, under statutory authorization, maintain an action of trespass to try title.

The purchaser may, in Texas, maintain an action of trespass to try title, unless the execution sale was absolutely void and vested no title.⁹⁷ Where defendant had title at the time of the execution sale, he cannot set up as a defense a title afterward acquired.⁹⁸ Where plaintiff is a purchaser

In execution purchaser's action against judgment debtor's wife to quiet title to corporate stock, evidence of connected transactions and surrounding circumstances was admissible.—McAlvay v. Consumers' Salt Co., 297 P. 135, 112 Cal.App. 383.

Evidence held sufficient

(1) To establish that corporate stock sold at execution sale was previously purchased in name of third person and held for benefit of judgment debtor.—McAlvay v. Consumers' Salt Co., supra.

(2) To support finding that judgment debtor was owner of corporate stock at time execution was levied.—McAlvay v. Consumers' Salt Co., supra.

but required finding that no other definite substantial amount was furnished by son for making improvements or paying therefor; and judgment was rendered declaring purchaser of sheriff's deed to be owner of lots subject to lien in favor of execution debtor's son for five hundred dollars.—Liflender v. Bobbitt, Mo., 111 S.W.2d 72.

Evidence held insufficient to require finding that price of fifty dollars execution sale of judgment debtor's interest in two hundred and twenty-five thousand shares of corporate stock was so inadequate as to render transaction unconscionable.—McAlvay v. under a judgment holding realty subject to the lien of a former judgment, defendant cannot, in the absence of an attack on such former judgment in the pleadings, rely on defects therein rendering it voidable.⁹⁹ Testimony that defendant furnished the money with which the judgment debtor acquired the property is admissible irrespective of the fact that plaintiff had no notice or knowledge of the transaction.¹ In trespass to try title by a purchaser at a sale on execution issued on a judgment against an officer of a corporation, whether equitable title to the property was in the corporation is a question for the jury, where the officer had purchased it in his own name and conveyed it to the corporation a short time before execution issued, and the corporation had paid the purchase price and all expenses from the date of the purchase by the officer.² Where it is contended that the sale was void because the officer making the sale did not give defendants personal notice as required by statute, the question is one for the jury on conflicting evidence as to mailing of notices to incorrect addresses;³ but where the uncontradicted evidence is sufficient as a matter of law to establish the issuance of the execution, the court should not submit the question to the jury as a controverted issue of fact.⁴ A finding that a sale was not for a grossly inadequate consideration will not be disturbed where the evidence supports it.⁵ Sustaining exceptions to defendant's answer alleging that the judgment was void is of no consequence where the judgment, execution, return and sheriff's deed were introduced in evidence without objection.⁶

- c. Rents, profits, and improvements
- d. Waste
- e. Remedies against purchasers

a. In General

The owner of property may maintain appropriate actions or proceedings against the purchaser at the execution sale where the sale is void, the property is not included in the writ, or does not belong to the execution debtor.

Where the sale is for any reason void,⁷ or where property not included in the writ⁸ or not belonging to the execution debtor⁹ is sold, the execution purchaser by assuming and retaining possession becomes liable in an appropriate action to the owner of the property.¹⁰ He is also liable for his wrongful acts in connection with the sale¹¹ or with relation to the property of third persons after the sale.¹² He is not liable for pursuing a right to enter on premises to remove the property purchased.¹³ Where property belonging to two or more persons is sold on execution against one, possession by the execution purchaser does not render him liable to the other owners.¹⁴ The purchaser is not bound to look to the application of the purchase money, and is not liable in an action by parties entitled to a portion of the price;¹⁵ nor is he responsible for any irregularity of the officer by which the purchaser from the execution debtor was deprived of notice of the levy and lien.¹⁶

Nudum pactum. Promises made by the execution purchaser, where without consideration, cannot be enforced.¹⁷

b. Liens and Encumbrances

The purchaser is not liable personally for liens on the property subject to which, and not for the payment of which, the property is sold.

A purchaser at an execution sale is not personally liable for a mortgage or other subsisting lien on the property, subject to which, and not for the payment of which, the property is sold,¹⁸ unless he is permitted to retain the amount thereof out of his bid.¹⁹ In other respects, where the lien or encumbrance attaches to the property sold, the purchaser is liable the same as the debtor was.²⁰

c. Rents, Profits, and Improvements

Where the execution sale is set aside, the purchaser is liable in a proper case for rents and profits, and should receive credit for necessary expenditures and improvements.

Where for any reason an execution sale is subsequently set aside, the general rule is that the execution purchaser is liable in an action by the judgment debtor, or the owner of the property, for the rents and profits accruing while the property was in his possession.²¹ The purchaser is not liable for rents which, without his fault, he did not receive,²² nor is he liable to account for rents and profits to a mortgagee where the mortgage debt is fraudulent and void.²³ He should be credited with the amount paid out for necessary expenditures,²⁴ and as stated supra § 307, with the cost of improvements made by him tending to enhance the value of the property. Where the purchaser has paid the purchase price, the interest thereon should be set off against the rent.²⁵ The purchaser is liable for insurance money received less his expense in obtaining the insurance and collecting the money.²⁶ Where a purchaser has no right to the possession or profits until the sheriff's deed, he is not personally liable for ground rent accruing between the day of the sale and the date of the deed.²⁷

It has been variously held that the purchaser is, and is not, liable for waste.

It has been held that the purchaser, being subject only to the right of statutory redemption outstanding in the judgment debtor and other parties designated in the statute as entitled to redeem, is not liable to the redemptioner for waste committed in the management of the property.²⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that during the period of redemption a purchaser at an execution sale has no right to denude land of its merchantable timber,²⁹ and that one making redemption may bring an action against him for the reasonable value of timber cut and removed.³⁰ Where the purchaser of real estate on sale under execution, intermediate the sale and the giving of a sheriff's deed, severs anything from the realty, he is liable for its value to the person who eventually receives the sheriff's deed.³¹ If a cotenant whose interest is sold has committed waste, the purchaser will take subject to the right of the other cotenant to an equitable adjustment of their rights in partition proceedings.³²

The owner may resort to any appropriate remedy, such as ejectment, or replevin, or trover, if the property is personal. Any statutory remedy may be pursued. Conditions precedent must be complied with, and the general rules as to parties, pleading, evidence, trial, and judgment apply.

Where the sale is void the proper remedy of the owner, out of possession, is ejectment in the case of real property,³³ or such statutory action as may be provided;³⁴ and in the case of personal property, replevin or trover, at the election of the owner.³⁵ It is sometimes held that, on a rule to show cause, the purchaser may be summarily required to return the property to the custody of the officer.³⁶ In some jurisdictions a writ of recordari has been held the proper remedy in case of real property,³⁷ and, of course, an action lies to quiet title,³⁸ unless the execution debtor has an adequate remedy at law.³⁹ Sometimes trespass may be brought against the purchaser.⁴⁰ A grantee of realty under an unrecorded deed from a judgment debtor is furnished with an adequate remedy at law by a statute providing for and defining the rights, duties, and liabilities of purchasers of realty at judicial sales, and of the persons then in possession thereof, the statute providing that the latter may demand a jury trial where the purchaser seeks possession by petition under the statute.⁴¹ Where defendant in fieri facias had tendered to the attorney of plaintiff on the day of sale and prior thereto the full amount due on the process, an injunction restraining the execution purchaser from taking possession of the land is proper.⁴²

Conditions precedent. In actions relating to personal property, a demand is a condition precedent.⁴³ Where a suit to quiet title is brought against the execution purchaser, on the ground that his claim as judgment creditor was fictitious, an offer to redeem is not necessary.⁴⁴

Time to sue. The suit must be brought within the time specified in the applicable⁴⁵ statute of limitation.⁴⁶ The title will not be disturbed after many years of acquiescence and the death of the judgment creditor who was the purchaser.⁴⁷

Defenses. In an action against the execution purchaser to recover the property he is estopped to deny the title of the judgment debtor.⁴⁸ Title in another person is no defense.⁴⁹ Laches is available as a defense in a proper case.⁵⁰

Parties. In actions or proceedings against purchasers, only necessary parties must be joined.⁵¹

Pleading. Where, in an action to quiet title brought against the execution purchaser, plaintiff does not in the petition or complaint directly attack the execution sale on equitable grounds but merely demands that defendant set forth the nature of his title, an answer containing general averments of the judgment, execution sale thereon, confirmation thereof, and the execution and recording of the sheriff's or marshal's deed under which he claims title, is sufficient without setting out in detail the issuance and levy of execution and sale thereunder and the steps necessary to the validity of the sale.⁵² A petition to declare payment of a lien out of the proceeds of sale void states a cause of action where it alleges an execution sale subject to the lien, purchase by the lienor, and that the amount of the lien was deducted from the proceeds of sale credited on the judgment against plaintiff, and prays that the amount deducted be credited on

Trespass to try title

(1) Plaintiffs were entitled to judgment, unless precluded by some statute of limitations pleaded by defendants, where deed under which defendants were claiming had been executed by a sheriff in connection with sale of land made under an execution on a judgment against one of the plaintiffs after return day on the writ.—Reynolds v. sheriff's levy, notice of sale, and sheriff's deed to defendant, which description referred to lands awarded to plaintiff by a partition decree, description taken with description in partition decree and extrinsic evidence established identity of the realty conveyed by sheriff's deed and sustained judgment for defendant.—Gutierrez v. Sheriff

It is within the discretion of the trial court to order the sheriff who made an execution sale, and executed the deed to the purchaser, to be made a party to an action by the execution defendant against the purchaser for the cancellation of the deed.—Colorado Mfg. Co. v. McDonald, 25 P. 712, 15 Colo. 516.

the judgment.⁵³ Where a petition correctly describes a constable's deed, but in a subsequent paragraph erroneously states the volume in which the deed is recorded, admission of a certified copy of the deed is not a variance.⁵⁴

Evidence. In an action to recover personal property, the burden of showing the illegality of the sale rests on plaintiff.⁵⁵ In an action of trespass, defendant is not required to prove that the officer making the sale was a de facto officer.⁵⁶ Where plaintiff is pursuing the proper remedy, evidence of prior attempts on his part to establish his right by wrong remedies is not admissible against him.⁵⁷ In a suit to quiet title, where defendant purchaser introduces the judgment, execution, and proceedings of the sheriff under it, and the judgment is not denied by plaintiff, defendant's title is sufficiently established.⁵⁸ As against a contention in a suit to try title that a sheriff's deed was inadmissible on the ground that it was not shown that execution had in fact been issued, the record showing rendition of the judgment, issuance of original execution, return nulla bona, and issuance of alias execution establishes a prima facie case, notwithstanding no return on the alias execution is shown.⁵⁹

Trial and judgment. In proceedings or actions against purchasers at execution sales questions of fact are for the jury.⁶⁰ In actions to quiet title, findings as to ownership of property must be sustained by the evidence.⁶¹ In an action to recover the value of property sold at a sheriff's sale, where the evidence without conflict supports plaintiff's allegations as to ownership of the property, a finding that plaintiff was not the owner cannot be sustained.⁶² In an action to establish title to realty as against a purchaser the question of the identity of land cannot be decided on an exception of no cause of action, but must be determined on the merits.⁶³ A direction of a verdict in plaintiff's favor for the entire title of the property in controversy is improper where it appears that defendant has at least some interest or title therein.⁶⁴ Where it appears that the owner was in possession of the property at the time of the levy and sale under execution on a judgment against a third person, the purchaser at the sale acquired no title to the land and the court should cancel the deed and quiet title in the owner.⁶⁵ In a suit in equity to recover goods of plaintiff sold to defendant on execution, such goods not belonging to the execution debtor, a refusal of the court, in awarding plaintiff recovery, to include additional goods in the award of damages, defendant having disposed of some of the goods, or to admit evidence of the value of the goods as part of a going business conducted by someone other than plaintiff is not improper.⁶⁶

§ 313. Title, Rights, and Liabilities of Assignees of, or Purchasers from, Execution Purchasers

The vendee of a purchaser at an execution sale stands in the shoes of his vendor, and may exercise the same rights and pursue the same remedies, as a general rule. The same is true of the assignee of the certificate of sale, to whom, after the assignment the deed should be made.

The vendee of a purchaser at an execution sale stands in the shoes of his vendor.⁶⁷ He takes all the right and title acquired by his vendor at such sale,⁶⁸ free from such claims as the property was free from in the hands of the vendor.⁶⁹ Ordinarily the purchaser's vendee acquires no better title than such purchaser, and a claimant of the property may set up the same defenses or equities against such vendee as he might against the purchaser;⁷⁰

In action to quiet title to realty conveyed to plaintiff by judgment creditor of certain defendants after purchasing it at execution sale, it was trial court's exclusive province to determine witnesses' credibility and weight and effect of their evidence, consider inferences reasonably deducible therefrom, and determine disputed fact as to whether one of such defendants was trustee for other defendants as equitable owners of

but where he is an innocent purchaser he may take a better title than the execution purchaser had,⁷¹ by reason as stated supra § 296, of his taking free of equities and irregularities of which the vendor had notice. An oral agreement made by the execution purchaser is not binding on his vendee who had no knowledge thereof.⁷² The fact that the execution purchaser is an administrator and may be refused credit in his account for the amount expended does not prevent a subsequent purchaser from him from acquiring a good title.⁷³ On failure of title, the remedy of the vendee, if any, is against the vendor only, and not against the execution debtor.⁷⁴ The vendee of a purchaser at a sheriff's sale which is void because of irregularity in the sale has no remedy as against his vendor where the deed contains no other covenant than special warranty.⁷⁵ A voluntary substituted purchaser at an execution sale has no cause of action against the original vendee for the amount of the purchase money paid over to him under a mutual mistake as to the identity of the estate sold.⁷⁶ The vendor is not entitled to relief from the vendee under the doctrine that the person who acquires a legal estate with notice of an earlier equity holds subject to such equity, where there is no preëxisting equity in the vendor.⁷⁷ The mere assignment of the interest of the execution plaintiff in a judgment under which land was sold to him on execution does not operate to convey his interest in the land purchased.⁷⁸

Assignee of certificate of sale. The certificate of sale is as stated supra § 224, assignable, and the sheriff's deed may and should be made to the assignee,⁷⁹ who thereby acquires all the rights and remedies of his assignor in the property.⁸⁰ The sheriff's deed executed and delivered to the assignee of the certificate of sale conveys to him the legal title, and, in connection with the equity acquired by the assignment, gives him a perfect title.⁸¹ The sheriff cannot be compelled to execute a deed to the assignee prior to the filing of the assignment according to statute;⁸² but even where the assignment is so defective that the officer cannot be compelled to execute a deed to the assignee, if he voluntarily does so the deed is valid and passes title.⁸³ A conveyance by the execution purchaser before he has received the sheriff's deed operates, or has the same effect, as an assignment of the certificate of sale.⁸⁴ The assignee of a certificate of sale does not acquire any greater rights than his assignor, and the same defenses and equities subsist against the certificate in his hands as in the hands of his assignor.⁸⁵ The assignee does not acquire any interest in the judgment debt or security therefor.⁸⁶ Upon failure of title the assignee is not liable for the amount of the agreed consideration⁸⁷ and, if the same has been paid, is entitled to recover it back.⁸⁸ On redemption the assignee may recover the money paid from the sheriff.⁸⁹ Where the assignee takes the certificate only as security, he has merely a lien on the land, which is satisfied by payment of the debt secured, and neither he nor his assignee with notice can subsequently acquire any title to the land by obtaining a sheriff's deed.⁹⁰ If the assignment was to secure a loan, and the assignee obtained a sheriff's deed and sold the property, the assignor may compel him to account for the surplus in excess of property from conflicting evidence as to terms of claimed trust.—Rabbit v. Atkinson, 113 P.2d 14, 44 Cal.App. 2d 752.

XII. RETURN

§ 314. Definition and Nature

A return is the short official statement of the officer, indorsed on the writ or attached thereto, of what he has done in obedience to the mandate of the writ or of the reason why he has done nothing.

A return on a writ of execution is the short official statement of the officer, indorsed thereon or attached thereto, of what he has done in obedience to the mandate of the writ or of the reason why he has done nothing.⁹³ It consists of the two acts of writing out the statement on the writ or on an attached paper and the filing.⁹⁴ The mere writing out of the statement is not sufficient without filing it,⁹⁵ and vice versa the mere filing of the writ with no statement is not a return.⁹⁶ When the process is brought into court with the official indorsement on it as required by law, whether true or false, it is a return.⁹⁷

The office of the return is to inform the court and the parties of what was done, and to make the recitals contained in the return of record.⁹⁸

Where the execution is satisfied, it is a necessary part of the return that the sum realized, unless paid to the judgment creditor or his attorney, be brought into court.⁹⁹

§ 315. Necessity

It is the duty of the officer to whom an execution is directed to make a proper return thereof, but as a general rule a writ of execution, when duly executed, is good, although never returned by the officer.

It is the duty of the officer to whom an execution is directed to make a return thereto on or before the time fixed by law, to the proper court or officer, in all cases, whether or not it has been executed;¹ and, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Sheriffs and Constables § 168, also 57 C.J. p 983 notes 51, 52, if the officer fails to make due return, he may be compelled to do so by the court out of which the execution issued. Under some statutes, however, the sheriff is not required to return the writ to the clerk's office unless it is desired to renew the same or unless it is satisfied.² Of course, a void writ need not be returned.³

At common law, all writs of execution which were to be executed by the sole authority of the sheriff, such as a writ of fieri facias, when duly executed, were good, although never returned by the sheriff.⁴ Likewise, a lack of return of execution is not conclusive against a finding that the execution was placed in the sheriff's hands.⁵ The failure of an officer levying an execution to make return of facts showing the satisfaction thereof does not prevent the judgment from being treated as discharged.⁶ The effect of a return or defects therein on the title of a purchaser at execution sale is hereinafter discussed infra § 330.

court, and no particular day is specified when it is to be returned, the officer has all the days of the term to return it,²⁹ unless he is required by statute³⁰ or unless he is ruled, on motion and cause shown,³¹ to return it on some particular day. An execution returned on the first day of the term is not returned prematurely.³² If the writ is returnable at the next term of court, it means the next regular term as distinguished from a special term.³³ If the term of court to which the writ is returnable is afterward altered by statute to a later date, the writ remains in full force until such later day.³⁴ A return may be made even while an action is pending against the officer for neglecting to levy the writ.³⁵

It is not necessary that the return should be written out and signed when the levy is made.³⁶

After return day. While it is the duty of the officer in all cases to return the writ by the return day,³⁷ yet it is not necessary that the return should be so made,³⁸ but it may be made at any time thereafter, and when so made it is of equal effect and of equal verity as if it had been made by the return day.³⁹ Neither of the parties can be deprived of the return by the officer's neglect or failure so to return the writ at the prescribed time;⁴⁰ nor will a levy made thereunder be invalidated by such neglect or failure.⁴¹ If an officer has commenced the service of an execution at any time before the day on which it is returnable, he may complete the service after the return day, and retain the execution to indorse such service thereon, and the whole proceedings will relate back to the time when the service commenced.⁴² Under special circumstances and for good cause shown the court may extend the time within which the return is to be made.⁴³

Before return day. In many jurisdictions the officer may return the execution before the return day, even unsatisfied, where he has been unable after diligent search to find property subject to the writ.⁴⁴ In other jurisdictions, however, where the statute fixes a definite return day, or a day a prescribed number of days after the issuance of the execution, a return of nulla bona made before that time is premature and irregular.⁴⁵ A return of nulla bona may be made, under the instructions of the judgment creditor, immediately after it has become evident that the debtor has no property which can be seized.⁴⁶ Where the officer makes a return of nulla bona before the return day, at the request of the judgment creditor or his attorney, such return has been regarded as the act of the party, and not the official act of the officer, and supplementary proceedings founded on such return will be set aside on application of the judgment debtor;⁴⁷ but the fact that the attorney for the judgment creditor gave the sheriff an indemnifying agreement waiving any damages which might accrue to plaintiff by return of the writ before the return day has been held not to invalidate the return where the evidence shows that the writ was returned in his discretion and not on the order of the attorney.⁴⁸ Where the ends of justice will be furthered thereby, and there is no evidence that the sheriff can derive any advantage from holding the execution until the return day, it has been held to be within the power of the court to compel an earlier return;⁴⁹ but it has also been held that the time allowed by law for the return of an execution cannot be abridged by an order of any court.⁵⁰ In determining whether a return has been made before the return day, the return speaks from the date it is filed in the clerk's office, rather than from the date indorsed on the writ by the sheriff.⁵¹

Dormant judgment. A return of nulla bona cannot be made on an execution after the judgment under which it was issued has become dormant.⁵²

Excuses for delay. Failure to make return within the statutory time may be excused by the circumstances.⁵³ A stay, granted by a court of competent jurisdiction, which restrains a sheriff from enforcing an execution has been held to suspend the running of the time in which he is required to return the writ.⁵⁴ Neither the authorization of plaintiff to return the writ to be renewed,⁵⁵ nor the oral direction by plaintiff's attorney, where under the statute a request for delay must be in writing,⁵⁶ nor the fact that the execution came to the officer's hands but a few days before the return day,⁵⁷ nor the fact that the sale was not made until after the return term,⁵⁸ will excuse the failure to return an execution at the prescribed time. Stay laws enacted at the time of the Civil War did not operate retroactively.⁵⁹

The effect of delay in making the return on the title of a purchaser at an execution sale is discussed infra § 330.

§ 319. Form and Requisites in General

The return must be in writing on the writ itself or on a paper attached thereto and signed by the officer executing it.

The return to an execution must be in writing, on the writ itself or on a paper attached thereto.⁶⁰ It must be authenticated by the signature of the officer,⁶¹ but, unless required by statute, it need not be under seal⁶² or be sworn to.⁶³ If the officer cannot write, the return may be written in his presence and signed with his mark.⁶⁴ It will not vitiate a return that it is signed by the deputy for the sheriff, and not in the name of the sheriff, by the deputy.⁶⁵ Likewise, it has been held that a return on a sale made by the sheriff may be signed by his deputy.⁶⁶

§ 320. Making Return by Mail

Where a statute so provides, return may be made by mail.

Where authorized by statute, a return may be made by mail;⁶⁷ and, ordinarily, if a sheriff of another county to whom an execution is issued deposits it in the mail properly directed, or sends it by some safe conveyance, in time to reach the court from which it issued by the return day, it is sufficient.⁶⁸ Mailing of a return, however, is not a sufficient compliance with a statute expressly providing that the officer shall file it.⁶⁹

Return held sufficient

When the sheriff properly indorses thereon the date and hour he receives an execution, signs his name thereto, and indorses on the back thereof, "No personal property found," and there is appended to such execution a return containing in detail all the information the statute requires on a completed execution, there is a substantial compliance

show on its face either that the mandate of the writ has been fully complied with, or, if not, the existence of such a state of facts as, without fault or negligence on the part of the officer, prevented a compliance.⁷¹ It should consist of a concise statement of facts, showing what the officer has done in pursuance of his authority, and not of any conclusions of law.⁷² A return may be sufficient, although not strictly formal in its language,⁷³ and, if it is in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute, it is sufficient.⁷⁴ While a reasonable degree of certainty is all that is required,⁷⁵ the return must answer the whole writ,⁷⁶ and set out all the necessary facts⁷⁷ with sufficient precision to show whether they have or have not been legal and regular.⁷⁸ Of course, facts imported by necessary intendment need not be set out.⁷⁹ The date of delivery of an execution to a sheriff need not be noted by him on his return.⁸⁰ Under some statutes where money is levied on, it should be returned by the officer making such levy as so much money collected without sale.⁸¹

b. Where Writ Not Satisfied in Whole or in Part

A return nulla bona is usually sufficient where the writ is unsatisfied.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, it is usually held that a return nulla bona of a writ of execution is sufficient,⁸² although it has been held, adhering to the strict meaning of these words, that such a return is not of sufficiently extensive meaning to respond to the mandate of a writ of execution, both real and personal property being subject to execution.⁸³ A return of nulla bona has been held to be proper where the creditor postpones the sale, and another then proceeds to sell and exhausts the property,⁸⁴ but a return of nulla bona is improper because of a prior lien unless the executions creating such lien were actually levied.⁸⁵ A return of nulla bona may be made, although property was levied on, where the officer became convinced after the levy that the property did not belong to defendant;⁸⁶ but a return nulla bona after levying on some property of the debtor is improper, notwithstanding the officer's belief that it was not of sufficient value to make the money on the writ in the event defendant claimed his statutory exemption.⁸⁷

A return of an execution against several persons that no goods of such persons could be found is sufficient without stating that neither of them had any goods;⁸⁸ but it is not sufficient merely to state that no property of one of the several execution debtors can be found.⁸⁹ Sometimes, by statute, the return must show a demand in addition to inability to find property.⁹⁰ It is sometimes required by statute that, if no goods or chattels of the debtor shall be found, the officer shall indorse on the execution "no goods," and forthwith levy the execuwith the statute.—Battersby v. Gillespie, 222 N.W. 480, 57 N.D. 426.

Return insufficient

A return, "Executed 10/11/30, Execution set aside by T. J. Wills, lawyer in the case this the 3rd day of November, 1930," is bad, as the duty imposed by statute on the sheriff is to levy the execution on defendant's property, or, in default thereof, to return it nulla bona.—*McIntosh v. tion on the lands and tenements of the debtor.⁹¹

The sufficiency of particular returns has been considered in a number of cases.⁹² A return of "stopped by order of plaintiff" is a good return,⁹³ as is a return "enjoined,"⁹⁴ or a return that no levy has been made "by reason of the stay law."⁹⁵ An indorsement of the words "in bankruptcy" has been held to be a sufficient return, in that it is equivalent to an indorsement that defendant has no property subject to execution.⁹⁶ A return that the judgment has been satisfied by defendant in execution is bad.⁹⁷

c. Where Writ Satisfied in Whole or in Part

- (1) In general
- (2) Levy
- (3) Sale

(1) In General

A return of an execution which is satisfied only in part should state that defendant has no other property from which the residue of the execution can be satisfied.

Where a return shows that the property levied on is not sufficient to satisfy the execution, and fails to show why a further levy was not made, it is insufficient.⁹⁸ It should state that defendant had no other property from which the residue of the execution can be satisfied.⁹⁹ Where corporate shares are levied on, a certificate of the number of shares held by the debtor in the corporation, which the statute requires to be delivered to the officer, need not be returned.¹ A return of "bond taken and forfeited" is a sufficient return of forfeiture of a forthcoming bond.² A memorandum indorsed on the writ in the words "case arranged in bank as per instructions" is not equivalent to a return of satisfied.³

(2) Levy

A return of the ultimate facts as to a levy, which includes a description of the property seized, is sufficient.

The officer is required to return only the ultimate facts as to a levy,⁴ and a return in general terms that he "levied" is sufficient, without stating the acts done in making the levy, since the necessary proceedings will be implied.⁵ Where such a demand is required by statute, the return should allege a demand on the debtor or plaintiff in execution to point out property to be taken,⁶ or state a sufficient excuse therefor.⁷ It need not be stated that the levy was made subject to prior encumbrances.⁸ It is not necessary for the return to specify the sum for which each article seized sold, or the time of seizure.⁹ If the return states that the officer sold and delivered the possession of the property, it sufficiently shows an actual seizure, although it does not state in terms that he made a levy.¹⁰

Appraisement. Where land is sold on execution, the appraisement thereof, if such is required by statute, is no part of the return.¹¹ It is sometimes required by statute, however, that, where a levy is made on personalty, the return must show not only the levy but also the inventory and appraisement.¹² The nature of the estate appraised need not be described in the return,¹³ and the return need not state that notice of the appraisement was given to defendant.¹⁴ It is not a valid objection to a title acquired by levy of an execution that it does not appear from the return that the land was shown to the appraisers, or that they made the appraisal in view of the premises, or what means they took to ascertain the value.¹⁵ As a general rule a recital in the return of the officer that the appraisers were duly sworn or were sworn according to law is sufficient,¹⁶ although some statutes require a certificate of the oath to be attached to the return or indorsed on the execution.¹⁷

Description of property. The return to a levy on personal property should specially designate the particular property seized,¹⁸ but there is authority to the contrary.¹⁹ Where the description is in too general terms, evidence is admissible to apply it to the subject matter.²⁰ Where personalty is already under seizure by another officer, the return need not specify or describe the property, it being sufficient to refer to it as all the property which is in the custody of the officer in possession.²¹ If an officer does not specify in his return what he has levied on, but makes a return of levied on all defendant's goods, this is to be considered as a return of levied to the value of the debt, so far, at least, as to cast on him the burden of proof, what the goods were, and the value.²² The term "appurtenances" as used in a return is too general and indefinite to comprehend in its meaning any personal property as the subject of levy.²³

sion that the property can be clearly identified.²⁴ It is not required, however, that the description be such that the land may be identified by a mere inspection of the return. Certainty of description in the indorsement of the levy is essential only where the matter of description constitutes the only evidence to identify the property,²⁵ and a return will not be declared void, if it is possible, by any reasonable rules of construction, to ascertain from the description, aided by extrinsic evidence, what property is intended.²⁶ If the description is general, but sufficiently accurate to enable one to identify the land by reference to records and other means usually resorted to for that purpose, it is sufficient.²⁷ The return may refer to deeds or records in describing the land and thereby remove all doubt as to identification.²⁸ A return is insufficient where it fails to show the county or state in which the lands are situated, and does not show anything from which this can be determined.²⁹ If the levy is on part of a tract, the return must show what part was levied on.³⁰

(3) Sale

The officer's return should show that he has complied with all essential statutory requirements in making an execution sale.

When a debtor's land is taken on execution, the general rule is that the officer's return shall state in substance that every act which is required by statute to constitute a valid levy or sale was performed.³¹ It is not necessary that the performance of such acts shall be stated in direct terms, it being sufficient if it appears from the language used, or can be reasonably and fairly inferred from it, that the act was done.³² The return should give some general description of the land sold,³³ although it has been held that it is no part of the office of a return to show what land is sold on the execution.³⁴ The return should also show to whom the sale was made, the price realized, and all the steps taken in the sale.³⁵ The return need not specify the day or hour or the particular place of the sale,³⁶ nor need it set out the circumstances which authorized a sale at a place other than the ordinary place of sale.³⁷ Where the officer has been prevented from selling property levied on, the return should state the cause by which he was prevented.³⁸ Under some statutes if the sheriff is unable to realize two thirds of the valuation of the property, he must so return the fact.³⁹ If the property is not paid for after the sale, the return may be that the property was knocked down to a certain person for a specified price, and that he has not paid the purchase money and that therefore the premises remain unsold.⁴⁰ The return after a sale of real estate need not set forth the levy and sale where a deed has been executed setting forth such facts.⁴¹ A return need not state that the judgment creditor elected to have the levy made by sale instead of execution.⁴²

Notice of sale. It is generally held the return should show that the required notice of sale, whether by advertisement or notice to the debtor, or by both, has been given;⁴³ but there is authority to the contrary.⁴⁴ Likewise, a return on an order of sale which fails to name defendant's attorney of record to whom a written notice of sale was mailed, as required by statute, is defective.⁴⁵

Disposition of proceeds. Where money, arising from an execution sale, is retained by the officer for costs, his return must show the particular items of costs for which such money was appropriated.⁴⁶ It is not a sufficient return on an execution, nor such as will protect the officer from a motion for the money collected, that he has retained the amount of damages which he supposes himself entitled to recover against the execution creditor on an indemnifying bond the latter had executed to him in another case.⁴⁷ Under some statutes the return of the sheriff, containing a schedule of distribution of the proceeds of an execution sale of realty, was required to be read in open court.⁴⁸

§ 322. Amendments

Courts have power to allow amendments to officers' returns on executions, to make records conform to the truth.

Interest sold

Where the interest which a party has under a contract for a conveyance of realty on conditions to be performed by him is sold, the interest must be truly described and it is not sufficient to return that such interest was sold as an equity of redemption.—Stevens v. Legrow, 19 Me. 95.

Details of sale

Under a statute requiring a return to state the name of the purchaser and the price obtained, the details of the sale need not be set forth.—Tulane v. Dean, 4 N.J.L.J. 23.

Sale of entire tract

(1) Under a statute requiring real estate when taken in execution to be sold in separate tracts, and requiring the officer to offer each tract separately, then, if no bid is made, two tracts together, then more in suits

ble combinations until all the tracts have thus been offered, and then, if no bids are made, or the execution is still unsatisfied, to offer all together, his return should show the manner of offering the different tracts and the facts authorizing the sale en masse.—Diets v. Hagler, 141 N.E. 194, 309 Ill. 381.

(2) The return need not show that lots of land were sold separately where there is no claim that the property was sacrificed.—Wilson v. Swasey, Tex., 20 S.W. 48.

Claim by third person

If part of the goods levied on is claimed by a third person, and for that reason is not sold, a return of a sale of the balance of the goods and that the remainder has been claimed by a third person is sufficient.—Hunt v. Hunt, 1 Pa.L.J.R. 315, 2 Pa.L.J. 297.

deposited in the clerk's office, the return is not matter of record, and it may be amended by the officer without permission of the court;⁴⁹ but after a return has been filed and become a matter of record, the officer can no longer amend it of his own motion.⁵⁰ The court, however, has the power to allow amendments⁵¹ or the filing of a substituted return.⁵² Applications for this purpose are not granted as a matter of right,⁵³ but the granting of them rests in the sound discretion of the court.⁵⁴ Great liberality, however, will be allowed in making amendments,⁵⁵ and leave to amend will be granted where the amendment is in the furtherance of justice,⁵⁶ provided the rights of innocent third parties will not be impaired thereby.⁵⁷ The rule prohibiting collateral attack on the officer's return does not preclude an amendment of the return in a proper case to make it speak the truth.⁵⁸ Alterations made in the levy after return, without the authority of the officer or the execution creditor, are void.⁵⁹

An amendment relates back to the original return, and dates from it,⁶⁰ and the officer is freed from any responsibility on the original.⁶¹ An amendment of a return having been allowed by the court, the copy thereof duly filed has the same effect as if incorporated in the original return.⁶² Where a return stated the original attachment of the land sold thereunder to have been two years after the true date, the amendment of the return according to the fact does not affect the title of one taking a mortgage after the true date.⁶³ If the amendment is withdrawn the original return is reinstated.⁶⁴

Scope and purpose. Amendments of mistaken returns and of omissions therein are allowed to promote justice and equity,⁶⁵ by making the record agree with the true state of the facts.⁶⁶ Courts exercise this power to prevent innocent parties from suffering by the error or neglect of a ministerial officer, such as the sheriff.⁶⁷ Immaterial amendments, adding unimportant facts, are properly refused.⁶⁸ Facts occurring subsequent to a return cannot be incorporated into it by amendment;⁶⁹ nor will an amendment be allowed which only partially corrects a return, where, if the whole return was to be corrected so as to conform to the truth, an invalid levy would be shown.⁷⁰ A court has no power to allow an amendment by which the provisions of a statute would be defeated or evaded.⁷¹ An officer cannot, by amending his return, remedy his neglect to perform an act necessary to give efficacy to the execution.⁷² An amendment will not be allowed after a decree against the sheriff and his surety, so as to explain away his liability and enable his surety to escape liability.⁷³ A return of satisfaction made out of defendant who was principal in a forthcoming bond cannot be amended so as to show that the execution is still unsatisfied, without notice to the surety on the bond.⁷⁴ It has been held that the court, on a trial, cannot allow an amendment of the return for the purpose of rendering the execution admissible in evidence.⁷⁵ It is no objection to an amended return that it contradicts the original.⁷⁶

Power to compel. It is a general rule that a court will not compel an officer to amend his return,⁷⁷ but the officer may be compelled to perfect an incomplete return.⁷⁸ Accordingly, if a court may compel an officer to amend his return for the purpose of supplying obvious omissions, the power to compel amendment is limited to enforcing a return sufficient on its face, and the court cannot decide that a particular act was done or omitted and then require the officer to conform to such decision.⁷⁹

Persons entitled. A stranger to the proceedings cannot move to amend the return.⁸⁰ A party to the proceeding whether plaintiff or defendant, creditor or debtor,⁸¹ a purchaser⁸² or the officer making the return,⁸³ is entitled to ask leave to amend. The officer, however, has no standing to ask leave to amend, unless he has an interest in having the amendment allowed.⁸⁴ A sheriff out of office cannot amend his return so as to defeat an action brought against him for damages.⁸⁵

Time of. There is no fixed time within which an application to amend must be made, and, if the facts are clear and the rights of third persons will not be injuriously affected thereby, an amendment may be allowed by the court at any time subsequent to the return of the execution which may seem proper,⁸⁶ but, where there has been a considerable lapse of time, amendments should be allowed with caution and only where they are in furtherance of justice.⁸⁷ The return may be allowed to be amended after the lapse of many years by correcting a mistake as to who was the purchaser at the execution sale, where all the parties consent thereto.⁸⁸ A return may be amended even after a contest in which its validity is attacked.⁸⁹ It is usually held that an amendment may be allowed after the expiration of the term of office of the officer making the return;⁹⁰ but there is authority to the contrary.⁹¹ An amendment may be allowed after the death of the officer on the application of his administrator.⁹² However, an amendment should not be allowed after the death of the officer making the levy where neither a surviving officer nor any other disinterested person was reliably cognizant of the facts.⁹³ An amendment may be allowed pending a motion against the officer for failing to pay over the money collected on the writ.⁹⁴ It has been held, however, that an amendment will not be allowed after a motion, actually made, against the officer for an insufficient return,⁹⁵ but that an amendment may be allowed after notice of such motion but before it has been made.⁹⁶ Under a statute providing that the levying officer shall give notice of the filing of his return containing a schedule of the proceeds of the sale and that, if the distribution is not questioned or disputed within such time as fixed by court rule, it shall be final and conclusive, in the absence of allegation of mistake or fraud, after the return has become conclusive, it has been held that the officer has no standing to ask that it be amended.⁹⁷

Procedure. The proper method of obtaining amendment of a return is by motion in the original cause and not by formal civil action.⁹⁸ The motion is not a civil action and the forming of issues of law and fact and the trial thereof as in a civil action are irregular.⁹⁹ In a proceeding brought by the execution creditor against the sheriff and execution debtor to compel the sheriff to amend his return, it has been held that formal pleadings are not required and that the sheriff's answer setting up his version of the facts may be treated as a motion for leave to amend.¹ A motion for leave to amend is determinable by the court without a jury.² When such motion is made by some one other than the officer, he should be made a party to the proceeding,³ but neither the judgment debtor nor the judgment creditor need be notified when the motion is made by a purchaser.⁴ Oral evidence may be introduced on the hearing of the motion.⁵ If a mistake is relied on, the party moving for an amendment should show the mistake beyond any reasonable doubt,⁶ and if a new and material fact is sought to be added,

Sale of corporate stock

Under a statute providing that, where a shareholder's interest in a corporation is levied on, an attested copy of the execution and of the return thereon shall within fourteen days from the day of sale be left with the officer of the corporation whose duty it is to record transfers of shares, where it was shown that within the fourteen days the sheriff delivered to the proper officer a copy of the execution and return which was not attested and which failed to show the name of the purchaser, as between the corporation and the purchaser the court had authority to permit the sheriff to amend his return by setting forth the name of the purchaser, and thereupon to deliver to the corporation's officer a duly attested copy of the execution and return as amended, notwithstanding the passage of more than fourteen days since the sale.—Trinkle v. Original return not binding

Trial judge, on motion to amend return, could decide question whether sheriff's return conformed to truth on evidence before him, and was not bound by original return, and request that, unless means of correcting it could be found in the return itself, it was not amendable was properly refused.—Marble v. Bloom, 150 N.E. 831, 255 Mass. 22.

6. Mo.—Scruggs v. Scruggs, 46 Mo. 271.

proof of its truth is necessary.⁷ The motion can be made only in the court where the judgment was rendered and in connection with the action in which the judgment was rendered.⁸ The amendment must conform to the moving papers and order allowing it.⁹ It has been held that no one but the execution defendant can complain of irregularities in the proceedings for the amendment of a return, and that even he cannot do it in a collateral manner.¹⁰

§ 323. Record

Where a statute so requires, the return of an execution should be filed for record.

Under some statutes, it is the duty of the officer, unless relieved thereof by the execution creditor, to cause the return on his levy, particularly where the levy is on real estate, to be recorded.¹¹ In order to become matter of record, a return must be actually filed in the proper office¹² and is generally required to be recorded in a book kept for that purpose.¹³ Under some of the statutes, a copy of the execution with the return need not be filed for record where the real estate levied on has been attached in the suit in which the execution issued.¹⁴ Under some statutes filing for record is essential to the passage of title by levy on real estate¹⁵ or by sale thereof;¹⁶ but under other statutes it is only necessary as against creditors and bona fide purchasers without notice.¹⁷ If the return is not dated, an entry on the execution book on the day of return is sufficient evidence of the date of the return.¹⁸ If there is a variance between the date of the return as made by the officer, and the date as made by the clerk on filing, the former will control.¹⁹ The record may be corrected on motion.²⁰

§ 324. Defects, Objections, and Waiver

Objections to a return of an execution ordinarily cannot be made by defendant's creditors, and objections to such return may be waived.

As a general rule, irregularities in, and objections to, the return of an execution are available only to defendant, and not to his creditors,²¹ although under a statute providing that any person interested may except to a return, the holder of a lien superior to the execution lien may object to a return which impairs his rights.²² Objections may be waived,²³ as by a failure to object in due time.²⁴ Objections to the acts of the prothonotary cannot be raised as exceptions to the sheriff's account.²⁵

§ 325. Quashing or Setting Aside

A court has power, where there are sufficient grounds, to set aside or quash the return of an execution.

There is no question as to the power of courts to set aside or quash the return,²⁶ but there must be sufficient grounds to warrant the court in acting.²⁷ That the return is false in fact is usually ground for quashing it.²⁸ It has been held, however, that the court cannot quash or annul a return on mo-

Return of satisfaction

(1) Where execution is returned satisfied, or credited by a sum made by the sale of property not the execution defendants', and the execution creditor has had to refund the money to the purchaser, he may have the levy and return quashed.—Sanders v. Hamilton, 3 Dana, Ky., 550.

(2) Where an officer, without collecting the full amount required by the mandate of an execution, returns the same satisfied, and an entry to that effect is made on the docket, the judgment creditor may move to vacate the return and have the entry modified or may bring an action for compensation.—Todd v. Botchford, 86 N.Y. 517, affirming 24 Hun 495.

(3) The execution creditor may have the return of execution satisfied set aside as prejudicial to his rights where the officer takes a promissory note for the amount from a third person, by the direction of the execution debtor, but the officer himself is bound by his return, and can nei-

tion on evidence aliunde of irregularity, falsehood, or illegality in the conduct of the officer, the only remedy being by action against the officer for a false return and damages resulting therefrom.²⁹ As a general proposition, it is a good ground for quashing a return that it is not made in accordance with the requirements of the law, that the officer who made it was disqualified, that the levy was made prematurely, or that in making the levy there has been a violation of the debtor's right to select the property to be levied on.³⁰ Where facts are stated which show that there was no levy in fact, the return may be set aside.³¹ Various other matters have been held to be,³² or not to be,³³ grounds for quashing a return. Refusal to quash is sometimes held to be justified because of acquiescence of the moving party.³⁴ In defense of the motion it may be shown by defendant in execution that the money had been tendered and refused.³⁵

The application may be made by a motion or rule to show cause.³⁶ The execution creditor cannot move to quash a return on grounds of irregularities in the levy and sale which concern the execution debtor only,³⁷ although a subsequent mortgagee of the land taken on execution may move to set aside the return.³⁸ The court may hear the application and determine it without the intervention of a jury.³⁹

Notice. All parties interested must be notified of a motion to quash or set aside a return.⁴⁰ Thus, if he would be injured thereby, notice must be given to the officer,⁴¹ execution creditor,⁴² execution debtor,⁴³ and the purchaser at the execution sale.⁴⁴ Persons having no legal interest in the matter are not entitled to notice.⁴⁵

Effect. The vacation of a false return of satisfaction leaves the lien still in force against the property;⁴⁶ but the quashing of the return of an execution sale, where the purchaser has given a sale bond, does not revive the lien of the levy, but gives the judgment creditor a right to have another execution issued.⁴⁷ Quashing such a return does not, however, per se set aside the sale or quash the bond. An order to that effect is necessary.⁴⁸ The setting aside of a return does not conclude or estop the officer as against parties who do not act on the faith of it.⁴⁹

Invalid levy

Where separate judgments were recovered against each of two brothers, and a third judgment was recovered against two brothers jointly, and executions were issued on the judgments and were levied on purported equities of redemption of the brothers in a tract of land, although the tract was not owned jointly by them, and one brother owned part of the tract and the other brother owned the remaining part, returns on the executions were required to be quashed, since neither brother had an equity of redemption in the entire tract on which the sheriff could levy, and in reality the executions were not levied on anything.—Pinson v. Williams, 155 S.W.2d 869, 288 Ky. 314.

32. Illegal exemption

A return, setting off the homestead as exempt, may be set aside where the exemption is illegal.—Creath v. Dale, 60 Mo. 41.

Payments after return day

Where the return shows that the officer received some of the payments thereon after the return day, that portion of the return will be quashed.

—Rudd v. Johnson, 5 Litt., Ky., 19.

Where levy and sale have been quashed, the officer's return should also be quashed.—Bogle v. Moore, 6 Ky.Op. 4.

33. Dishonor of check

The fact that a check, drawn by the officer to the execution creditor, on a fund, arising from the transfer of the amount of a check, given by the execution debtor, to the credit of the officer on the books of the bank on which the check is drawn, is dishonored is not a ground for quashing a return of satisfied.—Bailey v. Robinson, 14 Ky.L. 670.

Interest levied on

It seems that it is no ground for quashing a return that the interest levied on was not subject to execution.—Warfield v. Wirt, D.C., 29 F. Cas.No.17,174, 2 Cranch C.C. 102—23 C.J. p 803 note 46.

§ 326. Construction

The return of an execution should be construed so as to make it consistent with the proper discharge of his duties by the officer making it, if it can reasonably be made to bear such interpretation.

The well settled rule is that the return of an officer when ambiguous is to be so construed as to make it consistent with the proper discharge of the duty imposed on him by law, if the return by reasonable intendment and construction can be made to bear this interpretation.⁵⁰ In construing a return every presumption will be made in favor of its truth and validity, and that the officer has in all things acted legally and properly.⁵¹ There is no presumption, however, contrary to the facts recited in the return.⁵² Although mere surplusage in the writ may be disregarded,⁵³ all the language of the return must be construed together and effect given to every clause and word, if possible, in order to ascertain the intended meaning.⁵⁴ A return that a named person, plaintiff's attorney, was the purchaser at a certain sum and had paid the costs is to be construed to mean that he purchased as attorney and for plaintiff.⁵⁵ A return of a levy on certain property by virtue of the writ is an affirmation that it is the property of defendant.⁵⁶ The return of a levy is not contradicted by the fact that thereafter the officer surrendered the property levied on to the judgment debtor.⁵⁷ A return "not satisfied for want of buyers" does not show a levy.⁵⁸ Where the writ is against two or more,

a return that they have no property is equivalent to a return that neither of them has property,⁵⁹ and a return that no property of "defendant" was found is to be construed to mean "defendants" where there are several defendants.⁶⁰

By signing a complete return, the sheriff not only certifies to the facts therein stated which were done by him personally, but he also certifies as to things therein stated which were done by his deputy under his direction and in his behalf.⁶¹

Returns of sales. Since it is the policy of the law to uphold execution sales, the return under an execution sale will receive a liberal construction.⁶² The fact that a return does not show that notice in writing of an execution sale was given is not conclusive that proper notice was not given.⁶³

After a return has been made, the execution becomes functus officio. The officer, as agent, binds all parties by his return.

After a return has been made, the execution becomes functus officio.⁶⁴ A return terminates the lien of the levy,⁶⁵ but a return satisfied will not discharge the levy where the sale is set aside by other creditors on the ground of want of authority in the sheriff to make the sale.⁶⁶ Where all the facts are to the contrary, a return of an execution does not extinguish the debt.⁶⁷ The status of property seized by execution, as to third persons,

Since a writ of venditioni exponas gives the officer no authority not previously possessed, and is unnecessary to enable the officer to proceed with a sale under a fieri facias unless the return day of the writ has gone by, although neither ground nor time enough for the issue and return of such writ was shown, a reference thereto in the return may be treated as surplusage, not affecting the validity of the proceedings, if regular in other respects.—Yazoo & M. Personal property

Where a judgment and execution were against two defendants, a sheriff's deed to land based on a constable's return which stated that no personalty of "the defendant" was found in county was not void under statute requiring entry of execution against land to show the absence of personalty sufficient to satisfy debt, since language of entry would be construed to refer to both defendants in view of fact that all other parts of return referred to both.—Burden v. (1) A premature return by way of indorsement "nulla bona" on the execution is not necessarily such a final return of the execution as works its dissolution.—Ryan's Furniture Exchange v. McNair, 162 So. 483, 120 Fla. 109.

is fixed by the return thereon, and the status of that property can be changed only by an order of court.⁶⁸ The return of a sale does not transfer title, but merely gives a right to demand a deed conveying the title.⁶⁹ Where the property has not been levied on by the execution, or where it is of such a nature that it never could have been levied on, or reached by an execution at law, the return of the execution unsatisfied will not, of itself, give the creditor a specific lien on the trust property, or chases in action of the debtor.⁷⁰ After the lapse of time when the execution is returnable, the execution creditor is chargeable with notice of the return thereof and of the matters stated in such return.⁷¹

Binding parties. The officer is the legal agent and representative of plaintiff and defendant in the judgment, and also of the accepted bidder, and has the right to bind all the parties by his return of the execution.⁷²

§ 328. — As Evidence

The recitals in the return as to matters which are part of the officer's duty are admissible as evidence of the facts therein stated and are prima facie proof thereof.

The return is admissible as evidence of the facts therein stated⁷³ so far as the statement of such facts is a part of the officer's official duty, but no further.⁷⁴ As against the purchaser at an execution sale, it has been held that the officer's return is inadmissible,⁷⁵ but where the title to property is claimed through a sheriff's sale, the return to the execution is admissible in evidence in favor of the purchaser or of one holding under him.⁷⁶ A return satisfied is admissible to show payment.⁷⁷ Recitals in a return as to matters which are part of the officer's duty are prima facie evidence of the truth of the facts recited therein,⁷⁸ even against third persons,⁷⁹ and will be taken as true unless disproved.⁸⁰ This is not true, however, of recitals in the return as to matters which are not part of the officer's duty.⁸¹ A return has been held to be prima facie evidence of a proper levy.⁸² A return nulla bona is admissible to show insolvency,⁸³ and is prima facie evidence that the debtor has no property subject to levy.⁸⁴ A return nulla bona, however, is not evidence of the nonexistence of property situated beyond the jurisdiction of the court.⁸⁵ Such a return is no evidence that the writ was returned on the same day,⁸⁶ or before the return day.⁸⁷ In an action involving the question of whether the ownership of property at the time of the wife's death was in the husband or wife, evidence of the sheriff's return of "no property found" on an execution against the husband shortly before the wife's death is of little value on the question of ownership, in the absence of proof that the husband had denied ownership to the sheriff.⁸⁸ Where one claims under a sheriff's deed, the execution with the amended return making it conformable to the truth is admissible to prove the recitals in the deed.⁸⁹ The fact that his return appears on an execution sufficiently shows that he was the officer holding the same, and that he held it for the purpose of its legal enforcement.⁹⁰ A return is admissible to contradict the deed of a succeeding sheriff.⁹¹

Aider by extrinsic evidence. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain,⁹² corroborate,⁹³ or supply defects in a return.⁹⁴ Evidence of extrinsic facts not required to be stated therein is admissible in aid of a return.⁹⁵ Where a claim is interposed by a third person to the land levied on, a failure to enter material facts by the officer cannot be corrected by proving such facts by parol, unless in exceptional cases where equity would afford relief on the ground of accident or mistake.⁹⁶

Sufficiency of evidence to overcome return. As an official record made by the officer in the discharge of his official duties, greater weight will as a rule be attached to a return than to evidence generally.⁹⁷ The evidence to overcome the return must be clear and decisive,⁹⁸ and the burden of proving the falsity of the return is on the person who seeks to show such fact.⁹⁹ In questions appertaining to the title to real property, the sheriff's deed furnishes proof of the adjudication, and its recitals control those of his return.¹ When an officer's return and the clerk's certificate of the filing thereof disagree as to the time when an execution was returned, the return prevails,² but, where there is a disagreement as to the time when a levy of execution was recorded in the clerk's office, the certificate of the clerk will prevail.³ The prima facie case of a proper levy arising from the return may be overcome by the recitals of the return itself, such as where it excludes the conclusion that the property was either actually or constructively seized.⁴

- a. In general

a. In General

As between the parties and their privies, a return is generally held to be conclusive as to matters required to be stated therein.

As a general rule, subject to some exceptions,⁵ a return is conclusive on the parties and their privies, as to matters required to be stated therein,⁶ and cannot be collaterally attacked.⁷ In some jurisdictions, however, a return is only prima facie evidence of the facts stated in it between the parties,⁸ and is subject, like other presumptive evi-

Value of land

In absence of any showing concerning value of judgment debtor's land, sheriff's declaration, in return on writ of fieri facias, that property was not worth amount for which it was mortgaged, must be accepted as

dence, to be rebutted by contrary proof.⁹ It has also been held that a recital in a return may be shown to have been the result of mistake or inadvertence, or fraud or collusion.¹⁰ Likewise, in a court of equity the truth of the sheriff's return may be impeached by parol evidence, and facts shown to be otherwise, if the acts of the officer, constituting the returns, were mala fide, or in violation of law, or beyond the scope of his official duty.¹¹

The return is conclusive only as to such facts as it is the legal duty of the officer to state,¹² and other statements may be collaterally attacked.¹³ A return may be impeached as to a matter which is not a material or proper part of it.¹⁴

A return to be conclusive must be a regular legal return,¹⁵ signed by the officer.¹⁶ A return amended after the officer's term of office has expired is not conclusive.¹⁷ A return is not conclusive where some other portion of the record in the same case contradicts the return.¹⁸ The return may be contradicted when the question of jurisdiction of the party arises, and it may be shown that jurisdiction was never in fact obtained, notwithstanding recitals to that effect in the return;¹⁹ and the same is true where the question arises as to whether or not a given person is in fact a privy.²⁰

The legal effect of the return may be inquired into and determined.²¹ Evidence which does not contradict a return²² is not inadmissible as attacking its conclusiveness.²³

Date. It seems that the date of a return is not such a part of it that it cannot be contradicted.²⁴ Parol evidence is admissible to show that a date appearing in his return was no part thereof, but was inserted by the sheriff without authority after the return was made.²⁵

Nulla bona. A return of nulla bona is conclusive between the parties unless procured by the fraud of one of them, and its verity cannot even then be inquired into without making the officer a party.²⁶ Such a return cannot be questioned in a judgment creditor's suit,²⁷ nor in an action of ejectment brought by a bona fide purchaser at an execution sale against a prior grantee of the execution debtor, whose deed was not recorded until after the sale.²⁸ It has been held, however, that such a return is not conclusive evidence of a devastavit.²⁹ It has also been held that, although ordinarily a return wholly unsatisfied is regarded as conclusive that no property belonging to the judgment debtor can be found, where the person who has a right to rely on that fact sets up other independent facts which utterly repudiate the fact that the judgment debtor has no property subject to execution, it would be but a travesty to permit a conclusion arising from the sheriff's return of the writ to prevail.³⁰

As to levy. While statements made in an officer's return on an execution as to the levy made thereunder are as a rule conclusive,³¹ nevertheless mere statements of opinion or statements of reasons are not conclusive.³² Thus it has been held that facts stated as a reason for not making a levy are not conclusive, on the theory that the statement of such facts is not an official act or within the duty of the officer.³³ If there is no duty to schedule the personal property levied on, it seems that a return enumerating the articles levied on does not preclude evidence that the chattels in dispute were a part of the property levied on, where the return was ambiguous.³⁴

As to delivery bond. The statements in a sheriff's return as to the taking and forfeiture of a delivery bond may be impeached.³⁵

As to sale. As a general rule, and in the absence of fraud or mistake, the official return of a sheriff concerning the sale of the property levied on is conclusive,³⁶ except where directly attacked as in an action to set aside the sale.³⁷ Under some statutes, however, the return of the officer as to the advertisement of sale may be contradicted on a motion to set aside the sale.³⁸ The return has been held not conclusive as to who was the purchaser at the sale;³⁹ but there is authority to the contrary.⁴⁰ The recital of a levy and sale of defendant's interest does not estop him from showing that the title to the land was not in him, but in his co-defendants.⁴¹ It has been held that, where the return makes no mention of the land having been offered in parcels before being sold as a whole, such fact cannot be shown by the testimony of witnesses.⁴²

b. As to Third Persons

A return of an execution is not conclusive as to third persons.

The return is not conclusive against third persons,⁴³ that is, against persons other than parties to the action in which the execution was issued and those claiming under them as privies.⁴⁴ As to such persons the return of an officer is prima facie evidence only of the matter stated in the return,⁴⁵ and the presumption of regularity is rebuttable.⁴⁶ A claimant of the property⁴⁷ or a purchaser at the execution sale who was not a party to the action⁴⁸ is within the rule. A purchaser is not precluded by a return stating the execution of a deed from showing that he had received no deed.⁴⁹ It has been held, however, that after an official return has become the foundation of a title acquired under a levy and sale, it is not competent to admit parol proof of the officer to contradict his return, either to impeach or sustain the validity of a purchaser's title.⁵⁰ One not a party to the action is not protected by the return,⁵¹ and so whether a purchaser paid his bid may be decided on evidence aliunde.⁵²

c. As Evidence for or against Officer

As to matters embraced therein which are within his official duty, an officer's return will, as a general rule, conclude him and his sureties.

An officer's return on an execution will as a general rule conclude him and his sureties as to facts or matters embraced in his return which are within his official duty.⁵³ If the return shows a levy, he cannot attack the validity of such levy.⁵⁴ While an officer cannot contradict his return he may fully explain the facts set forth in the return, where an action is brought against him, and he may sustain any part of the return by evidence aliunde.⁵⁵ He is not estopped by his return from proving facts not contained therein,⁵⁶ or from showing that the goods levied on did not belong to the judgment debtor.⁵⁷ As against a person who fraudulently procured him to make it, a sheriff may deny the truth of his return,⁵⁸ and the officer may show that an insufficient return was caused by the act of the judgment creditor.⁵⁹ The rule that the sheriff cannot contradict his return is subject to an exception where the officer brings a suit against a tort-feasor who is alleged to have taken the goods levied on and wrongfully converted them to his own use.⁶⁰ A return of nulla bona to an execution on a judgment against a surety in a replevin bond is not conclusive against the officer as to the insufficiency of the surety.⁶¹ A sheriff may prove, in an action of replevin in which he is defendant, that at the time he seized the property replevied he had an execution in his hands, notwithstanding the return on the fieri facias shows that at the time the seizure was made the execution had not in fact come into his hands.⁶² Of course, the return, after the court has allowed it to be canceled, is not conclusive against the officer in favor of parties who did not act on the faith of it.⁶³

The return is prima facie evidence in favor of the officer making it but is subject to be rebutted and overturned by proof aliunde.⁶⁴ It is prima facie evidence in his favor only as to facts returned which are within his official duty.⁶⁵ In applying this rule it is generally held that the officer cannot incorporate the statement of an excuse or apology for the nonperformance of his duty into his return, so as thereby to make the same evidence in his own favor,⁶⁶ but exceptions to this rule have been made by some authorities.⁶⁷ An officer's return,

§ 330. Effect of Return or Defects Therein on Title of Purchaser

As a general rule, a failure to make a return, delay in making return, or defects in the return as made do not invalidate the title of a purchaser at execution sale.

The validity of title to property conveyed by an officer's deed at execution sale is not, as a general rule, dependent on the officer's return.⁶⁹ Indeed, the general rule is that the failure of the officer to make a return of the writ will not invalidate the title of a purchaser at the execution sale,⁷⁰ but in some jurisdictions the rule is otherwise.⁷¹ It has been held that the title of the execution purchaser is invalidated by the absence of a return evidencing the sale, unless the fact that the execution is lost is made to appear, and the loss is supplied in a proper manner.⁷²

Likewise, the fact that the officer has not made a return to an execution within the proper time does not affect the validity of a sale made under it,⁷³ and, even in jurisdictions where a return is held necessary to the validity of a sale, a sale is not invalidated by a delay, but the return when made relates back to the time named in the writ.⁷⁴

As a general rule, the title of a purchaser at an execution sale cannot be affected by defects or informalities in the return,⁷⁵ if there is a sufficient description of the property sold whereby it can be identified.⁷⁶

XIII. PAYMENT, SATISFACTION, AND DISCHARGE

§ 331. What Constitutes

An execution is satisfied by a payment of money or by a conversion of the debtor's property into money. A lawful tender of the amount of the writ operates as a satisfaction; but a mere contract does not satisfy an execution until it is performed.

An execution is satisfied by a payment of money or by a conversion of the debtor's property into money.⁷⁷ A lawful tender of the amount of the writ operates as a satisfaction;⁷⁸ but a mere contract does not satisfy an execution until it is performed.⁷⁹ An inquisition finding that land levied on under execution would be sufficient to pay in seven years is not equivalent to a satisfaction of the execution.⁸⁰

The fact that an execution debtor does not offer certain property as payment of the execution is immaterial where it is taken and accepted by the

(1) Codefendant

Unless otherwise provided by statute, satisfaction of an execution by one of several codefendants who were all principals on the cause of action extinguishes the judgment, and such codefendant cannot subsequently issue execution against the other codefendants for his benefit.

Except where it is otherwise provided by statute,⁸³ payment by one of several codefendants who were all principals on the cause of action, extinguishes the judgment debt, and execution cannot be subsequently issued against any of the other codefendants for the benefit of the one who made the payment;⁸⁴ nor is it in their power, by any arrangement between them, to keep the judgment on foot for the benefit of the party making the payment.⁸⁵ If, therefore, in such a case, the defendant paying the judgment takes an assignment to himself or, unless under special circumstances, even to a third person for his own benefit, the assignment is void and the judgment satisfied.⁸⁶ However, a transfer of property to the creditor by one of the codefendants expressly in satisfaction of but a portion of the judgment does not relieve the codebtors of liability for the balance.⁸⁷

(2) Third Person

Unless authorized by statute, payment of an execution by a third person may be refused.

In the absence of statute, payment of an execution by a third person may be refused.⁸⁸ If payment by such a person is accepted, the judgment is or is not extinguished, according to the intention of

In Georgia

(1) Where a codefendant in a judgment on an obligation on which all are liable as principals pays the judgment, he may, by having such payment entered on the execution, control and enforce the execution against his codefendants to compel them to contribute their share of the payment.—Register v. Southern States Phosphate & Fertilizer Co., 122 S.E. 323, 157 Ga. 561, answers to certified questions conformed to 122 S.E. 552, 32 Ga.App. 86—23 C.J. p 812 note 64 [a] (1), (3).

(2) A transferee of such a codefendant may control and enforce the execution in like manner.—Register v. Southern States Phosphate & Fertilizer Co., supra.

(3) The failure of the codefendant to establish that he is a surety does not defeat his right to enforce the execution.—Johnson v. Washington, 110 S.E. 889, 152 Ga. 635.

(4) A codefendant cannot enforce the execution, however, without complying with the provisions of the statute. A member of a partnership against whom an execution issued is a codefendant within the meaning of this requirement.—Easterling v. Adamson, 110 S.E. 757, 28 Ga.App. 257.

(5) The transfer of an execution to one of the defendants "for value received" without the entry thereon of any amount paid by the transferee is a settlement of the execution precluding enforcement of the execution against the other defendants.—Easterling v. Adamson, supra—23 C.J. p 812 note 64 [a] (4).

(6) If one of several codefendants in a judgment on an obligation on which they were liable as principals pays off the judgment with funds of all the codefendants, this is a payment of the judgment by all, and an execution issued thereon becomes functus officio.—Register v. Southern States Phosphate & Fertilizer Co., supra.

(7) A statement in the entry that the clerk is authorized to cancel the execution on his records as to the defendant who paid the judgment does not constitute a settlement of the execution so as to preclude the defendant from enforcing the execution for his benefit against his codefendants.—Register v. Southern States Phosphate & Fertilizer Co., supra.

(8) An entry of payment signed only by the clerk of the court is not a sufficient basis for a subsequent levy against codefendants at the instance of a defendant asserted to have made the payment.—Wilcher v. Williams, 127 S.E. 795, 33 Ga.App. 797.

the party paying.⁸⁹ A person not a party to an execution may advance money on it, and by agreement have it assigned to himself, and thus keep it in force.⁹⁰ However, if such person pay an execution in whole or in part, without an agreement that it is not to operate as a discharge, or without taking an assignment, the execution will be pro tanto satisfied, and cannot be afterward enforced.⁹¹

Persons indebted to judgment debtor. By statute in a number of states, after the issuance of execution against property, any person indebted to the judgment debtor may pay to the sheriff the amount of his debt, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to satisfy the execution; and the sheriff's receipt will be a sufficient discharge for the amount so paid.⁹² Such statutes are to be strictly construed.⁹³ The conditions which justify a payment by a debtor are that an execution has been issued, and not returned;⁹⁴ it is not essential to the validity of such payment that there should have been any levy.⁹⁵ The statutes do not authorize the sheriff to apply the proceeds of one execution in his hands to the satisfaction of another.⁹⁶

(3) Officer

A voluntary, unconditional payment of an execution by the sheriff or other officer ordinarily operates as a satisfaction thereof, and the officer cannot thereafter use the execution for his own reimbursement; but as a general rule the sheriff may have execution for his reimbursement where the payment is compulsory, or he takes an assignment, or it is expressly agreed that payment shall not operate as a discharge.

A voluntary and unconditional payment of an execution by the sheriff or other officer operates as a satisfaction thereof, and thereafter the officer is not entitled to use the execution for his own reimbursement,⁹⁷ except under peculiar circumstances and by express leave of court,⁹⁸ or unless defendant in execution waives the benefit of the rule.⁹⁹

The foregoing rule has been applied although the payment was compulsory,¹ and notwithstanding an agreement that the execution shall continue in force for the benefit of the sheriff.² As a general rule, however, where the payment is a compulsory and not a voluntary one,³ or where the sheriff takes an assignment at the time he makes the payment,⁴ or where it is expressly agreed that the payment shall not operate as a discharge,⁵ the sheriff may have execution for his reimbursement. In some jurisdictions there appears to be no question of the right of the sheriff to enforce his execution in any case where he is not using his office for the purpose of oppression.⁶

b. To Whom Made

In order to constitute satisfaction of an execution, payment must be made to the proper party, person, or officer. Payment may be made to the execution creditor or to the officer holding the writ while the writ is operative.

In order to satisfy an execution by payment, the payment must be made to the proper party, person, or officer.⁷ Payment may be made to the execution creditor,⁸ or to one of several execution creditors.⁹

thority,¹⁰ payment cannot be made to a clerk of the court from which the execution issued.¹¹

Officer holding writ. Payment may be made to the officer holding the writ,¹² and such payment is good although the execution was irregularly issued,¹³ or notwithstanding the creditor never received the money.¹⁴ A sheriff, as sheriff, has no authority, however, to receive money without an operative execution in his hands,¹⁵ and hence a payment to him as sheriff, prior to his having the execution in his hands, does not satisfy the debt.¹⁶ A sheriff has no authority to receive money on an execution which has not been levied, after the return day thereof,¹⁷ and the creditor will not be prevented from enforcing his judgment, unless he is proved to have received the money.¹⁸ The creditor may affirm the act, however, and by proper action compel the officer, as an individual, to pay over the money.¹⁹

If the execution has been levied, payment may properly be made to the sheriff after the return day,²⁰ and the sheriff not only has authority then to receive money when tendered in payment of the debt, but it is his duty to receive it, instead of satisfying the debt out of defendant's property.²¹

After the expiration of his term as sheriff, a person has no authority to receive payment of money on an execution, and payments made to him do not discharge the judgment unless actually paid over by him to plaintiff.²²

c. Amount

A payment of the amount of the writ satisfies it and a payment of a portion is a satisfaction pro tanto. An amount which the creditor could, but did not, include in the execution will be considered satisfied when the money has been made on the execution.

A payment of the amount of the writ satisfies

it.²³ A payment of a portion of the debt is a satisfaction pro tanto which plaintiff must credit.²⁴

Interest and charges. Inasmuch as the payment of a portion of the debt is a satisfaction pro tanto, interest cannot afterward be collected on the amount thus recovered, for a delay which was not caused by defendant.²⁵ Where a bond is given for the purchase money, payable on condition, interest is recoverable only from the time of the fulfillment of the condition.²⁶ The debtor need not pay the charges for publishing an inaccurate notice of sale.²⁷

Amounts omitted from execution. The law contemplates but one final execution; to prevent a defendant from being harassed by successive executions, where the money has been made upon an execution, the law will consider the execution satisfied with respect to amounts which the creditor could, but did not, include,²⁸ such as costs²⁹ or interest on the judgment.³⁰ Where the sheriff is paid the amount of the judgment under an agreement with the debtor to return the execution as satisfied on receipt of such amount, he cannot refuse to make such a return on the ground that he inadvertently failed to include his fees.³¹

exigency of his writ requires him to make the money, and he can receive only money in satisfaction.³³

b. Kind of Money

An officer may not receive anything but lawful money of the United States in satisfaction of an execution, except with plaintiff's consent, express or implied.

Payment of an execution must be in lawful money of the United States, and the sheriff or other officer may not receive anything else in satisfaction of an execution except with the consent of plaintiff.³⁴ This consent may be implied, however, as well as express,³⁵ and may be inferred from long acquiescence.³⁶

Lawful money of the United States was at one time considered to be gold and silver only,³⁷ but this is no longer the case, since the decision of the legal tender cases.³⁸ A judgment creditor has, unless restrained by statute, a right, however, to require payment in specie;³⁹ but this, like all other legal rights, must be exercised in good faith, and not with a view of sacrificing his debtor's property, and obtaining an unconscionable advantage.⁴⁰ Payment in bank bills which are not legal tender⁴¹ or in Confederate currency⁴² without the consent of plaintiff is unauthorized, particularly if the bank bill or currency is depreciated.⁴³ However, it has been held in some cases that, where a certain kind of money is current in the community and passes as currency, it may be accepted as payment,⁴⁴ unless the creditor has instructed to the contrary,⁴⁵ and this rule has been applied to Confederate currency.⁴⁶ If the sheriff or marshal receive bank notes or other nonlegal tender currency, and plaintiff sanctions the transaction either expressly or impliedly, the execution is discharged.⁴⁷

c. Property

An officer has no authority to receive specific property in satisfaction of an execution except with the creditor's consent. Choses in action are not an exception to the rule.

An officer has no authority to receive specific property in satisfaction of an execution directed to him,⁴⁸ unless the execution creditor consents, in which case the debtor is entitled to a credit pro tanto.⁴⁹

Choses in action such as mortgages, promissory notes, etc., are not an exception to the rule that money alone can be received by the sheriff in satisfaction of the writ.⁵⁰ The acceptance of a note is not a satisfaction, although the maker of the note pays it to a third person to whom it has been transferred.⁵¹ However, a chose in action may be taken in payment of an execution with the consent of plaintiff,⁵² although where it is accepted by the creditor as conditional payment there is no satisfaction if the condition fails.⁵³ Thus, where notes are taken, payment of the notes may be expressly made a condition precedent to the discharge of the execution.⁵⁴

Whether a chose in action has been received in satisfaction of the execution is a question of fact.⁵⁵

an officer cannot set off executions in his hands;⁵⁶ but there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁷

Statutory provisions. By statute in a number of jurisdictions, an officer who has in his possession two executions of different parties for mutual claims may set them off one against the other.⁵⁸ This is an equitable right which the law protects and will enforce.⁵⁹

In order that such a set off may be made, the parties to the judgments on which the writs are issued must be the same,⁶⁰ and the judgments must in fact belong to, and be the property of, the respective parties thereto.⁶¹ A general execution issued on a personal judgment and a special execution against property cannot be set off against each other.⁶² It is immaterial, however, what may be the nature of the causes of action on which the judgments have been rendered, as where one is in tort and the other is in contract.⁶³ It has been held that neither the sheriff, the coroner, nor the constable can set off executions unless they are in his possession as an officer authorized and obliged to obey them and unless the writs are directed to him.⁶⁴

If necessary for the protection of the officer against the consequences of making a set-off, reasonable security may be required.⁶⁵

§ 336. Levy as Satisfaction

- a. Personal property
- b. Real property
- c. In favor of third persons

a. Personal Property

- (1) In general
- (2) Conclusiveness of presumption of satisfaction

(1) In General

A levy on sufficient personal property to satisfy the debt is, until disposition of the levy is accounted for, a prima facie satisfaction of the debt, and operates, as long as the property remains in legal custody, as a suspension of further remedies on the part of the creditor to obtain satisfaction.

Although in a number of cases it has been said that a levy upon sufficient personal property is a satisfaction of the execution,⁶⁶ this doctrine has long since been exploded.⁶⁷ The settled rule is that a levy on sufficient personal property is, until the disposition of the levy is accounted for, a prima facie satisfaction of the debt,⁶⁸ and operates, as long as the property remains in legal custody, as a suspension of further remedies on the part of the creditor to obtain satisfaction.⁶⁹ A levy and sale under a subsequent execution on the same judgment and against the same defendant, while the former levy remains, are void and no title passes.⁷⁰

Where an execution is levied on land and personal property at the same time, however, and the land alone is sold, the execution is not prima facie satisfied by the levy on personal property, and the purchaser of the land gets a good title.⁷¹ The rule that the writ is satisfied by a levy applies only as to the debtor whose property is levied on and not as to codebtors.⁷²

Value of property. To give rise to the presumption of satisfaction, the levy must have been made on property of sufficient value to satisfy the debt.⁷³ Some courts have held that this must be shown affirmatively before satisfaction will be presumed;⁷⁴ others, however, have held that when it appears that a levy has been made, and there is no showing as to the value of the property, the presumption is that it was of sufficient value to satisfy the execution.⁷⁵

(2) Conclusiveness of Presumption of Satisfaction

The prima facie satisfaction resulting from a levy becomes absolute if the property is wasted, destroyed, or otherwise lost through misconduct or negligence of the plaintiff or the officer. The presumption of satisfaction is rebutted whenever it is shown that the plaintiff has been prevented by act of the defendant or operation of law from reaping the fruits of his levy.

The prima facie satisfaction resulting from a levy becomes absolute if the property is wasted, destroyed, or otherwise lost through the misconduct or negligence of plaintiff or the officer,⁷⁶ and plaintiff must seek his remedy against the sheriff.⁷⁷ There is no satisfaction, however, if the property is destroyed or lost without any fault on their part, but the loss in such a case falls on defendant.⁷⁸ The presumption also becomes conclusive if, after a great lapse of time, a disposition of the levy is unaccounted for.⁷⁹

Rebuttal of presumption. The presumption of satisfaction by levy may be rebutted.⁸⁰

The presumption is rebutted whenever it is shown that plaintiff has been prevented, either by the act of defendant or the operation of law, from reaping the fruits of his levy.⁸¹ Thus it is rebutted where defendant is left in possession of the property and permitted to use it as his own, and no further steps are taken under the writ,⁸² or where the property has been restored to defendant,⁸³ on the execution of a delivery bond,⁸⁴ or to the possession of a claimant, on the execution of a bond for the trial of the right of property,⁸⁵ or has been disposed of to the satisfaction of defendant otherwise than in payment of the execution.⁸⁶ Likewise the presumption is rebutted where the property has been fraudulently withdrawn by defendant from the possession of the officer;⁸⁷ and it is rebutted where the levy has been removed or nullified by process of law.⁸⁸

The presumption is rebutted by showing that the property levied on was exempt,⁸⁹ or not subject to execution,⁹⁰ or exhausted by satisfying prior claims or executions;⁹¹ or that the property did not sell for enough to satisfy the execution;⁹² or that property formerly levied on is the identical property levied on and sold in the present proceeding.⁹³ Proof of inability to sell for want of bidders rebuts any presumption of satisfaction,⁹⁴ as does inability to sell for want of time to advertise.⁹⁵

Where there are several executions in the sheriff's hands, a levy of one of them on sufficient personal property to satisfy all does not create a presumption of satisfaction of those executions not levied.⁹⁶

b. Real Property

In some jurisdictions the levy of an execution on land of sufficient value to satisfy the execution raises a presumption of satisfaction, but as a general rule such a levy does not operate even prima facie as a satisfaction.

In some jurisdictions it has been held that the levy of an execution on land of sufficient value to satisfy the execution raises a presumption of satisfaction, as in the case of a levy on personal property,⁹⁷ but is not an absolute satisfaction.⁹⁸ As a general rule, however, a levy on land does not operate even prima facie as a satisfaction;⁹⁹ there can be no satisfaction of an execution levied on real estate until the purchaser gets a good title at the sale.¹

Elegit, extent, and liberari facias. Except as otherwise provided by statute,² where there is a levy by extent³ or liberari facias,⁴ a delivery of seizin, and a return of the writ, the execution is satisfied. A return of "lands delivered" on an elegit, is a legal satisfaction.⁵

c. In Favor of Third Persons

A levy of an execution operates as a satisfaction in favor of third persons whenever it operates as a satisfaction in favor of defendant, and in some circumstances may operate as a satisfaction in favor of third persons, such as junior lienholders or subsequent bona fide purchasers, although not amounting to a satisfaction in favor of defendant.

The levy of an execution on sufficient property to satisfy the same operates as a satisfaction in favor of third persons who may be interested in having the execution satisfied, whenever it operates as a satisfaction in favor of defendant;⁶ and even when the circumstances are such that there is no satisfaction in favor of defendant there may be a satisfaction in favor of third persons.⁷

Junior lienholders and purchasers. A levy not amounting to a satisfaction of the execution in favor of defendant may, nevertheless, operate as a satisfaction in favor of third persons holding liens, by subsequently issued execution or otherwise, junior to the lien of the execution plaintiff, or of subsequent bona fide purchasers.⁸ The rights of junior lienholders and subsequent purchasers cannot be prejudiced by a release or surrender of the property levied on without their consent,⁹ or by unreasonable delay in proceeding to a sale under the execution.¹⁰

§ 337. Execution Sale

An execution is satisfied to the extent of the proceeds of the sale, even where the sheriff makes no return or a false return or misapplies the money. An execution sale does not operate as a satisfaction if by reason of substantial defects in the proceedings no title passes to the purchaser.

When property is levied on and sold under an execution, it is a satisfaction of the execution to the extent of the proceeds of the sale.¹¹ If a sum is realized equal to the amount due, the execution is thenceforth functus officio,¹² and a subsequent sale of other property under another execution is void.¹³ It is immaterial that the purchaser is the judgment creditor.¹⁴ If the officer chooses to give credit to the purchaser, it is still a satisfaction of the execution to the amount of the sale, especially when done with the concurrence of the execution plaintiff.¹⁵

On the other hand, if not enough is realized on the sale to pay the debt, the execution is not satisfied as to the balance.¹⁶

Irregular or defective proceedings. An execution sale is a satisfaction of the execution to the extent of the proceeds whether or not the sheriff makes return to the execution,¹⁷ or even though he makes a false return,¹⁸ or misapplies the money.¹⁹

A sale does not operate as a satisfaction of the execution, however, where, by reason of any substantial defects in the execution or proceedings thereon, no title passes to the purchaser.²⁰ Thus a sale does not operate as a satisfaction where there has been no conveyance or binding contract to convey, and the bidder has not paid his bid.²¹ Likewise, if the purchaser does not make good his bid, and the resale is not made in time to fix liability on the bidder at the prior sale, the writ has been held not satisfied to the extent of the first bid.²² However, where the amount bid is not paid, and the sale is not set aside, but a deed is executed to the purchaser, it has been held that the writ must be considered satisfied to the extent of the sum bid.²³

Misconduct on the part of the creditor in stifling competition at the sale has been held not to render the sale a satisfaction.²⁴

§ 338. Arrest of Debtor under Execution against the Person

A taking of the debtor's body in execution prima facie discharges the debt and completely suspends further action to satisfy the judgment during the debtor's imprisonment. Unless otherwise provided by statute, a debtor's discharge from imprisonment with the consent or by order of plaintiff constitutes a satisfaction of the judgment debt and execution.

A taking of the body of the debtor in execution operates as a prima facie discharge of the debt and as a complete suspension of further action on the part of the judgment creditor against the imprisoned debtor to satisfy his judgment during the imprisonment of the debtor.²⁵ If there are several defendants, however, a capias against one does not bar plaintiff from taking out execution against the others liable on the same judgment.²⁶

Release or escape of debtor. Unless it is otherwise provided by statute,²⁷ a discharge of a debtor from imprisonment with the consent or by order of plaintiff constitutes a satisfaction of the judgment debt, and of the execution therefor;²⁸ and this rule applies notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary by the parties.²⁹ Where there is only a conditional liberation, however, under a promise to return if the terms are not complied with, and an actual return into custody in pursuance of the agreement, there is no satisfaction.³⁰

There is no satisfaction if the imprisonment is terminated without the consent of the execution creditor,³¹ as by an escape,³² or by reason of the creditor's refusal to pay jail fees,³³ or if the debtor obtains his discharge by force or fraud.³⁴ Subsequent assent by the creditor to the escape of the debtor, and an agreement that he may remain at large, does not satisfy the judgment.³⁵

§ 339. Release or Discharge without Satisfaction

A sheriff cannot discharge an execution if the judgment is not satisfied, and he cannot accept part in full satisfaction unless the creditor authorizes or ratifies such a compromise. The plaintiff in an execution which has been levied may for a valuable consideration release the property from the levy and from future levies. By some statutes, a release by the plaintiff for a valuable consideration is a satisfaction of the execution to the extent of the property released, in so far as purchasers and creditors are concerned.

A sheriff cannot discharge an execution if the judgment has not been satisfied;³⁶ nor is he authorized to accept part in full satisfaction,³⁷ unless the creditor authorizes such a compromise, or subsequently ratifies it.³⁸

Where an assignment to the execution creditor for the benefit of creditors is made by the execution debtor after a levy, and the assignment is void, the payment by the creditor on a junior writ discharges the lien of the older writ which he held on property of the judgment debtor in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.³⁹

Release for valuable consideration. The plaintiff in an execution which has been levied may for a valuable consideration release the levy and bind himself and subsequent transferees of the execution not to make a subsequent levy of the execution on the property.⁴⁰ By statute in some jurisdictions, a release by a plaintiff in execution, for a valuable consideration, of property subject to the execution is a satisfaction of the execution to the extent of the property so released, in so far as purchasers and creditors are concerned.⁴¹ The consideration contemplated by the statute is money or something convertible to money or having a money value, except marriage,⁴² and must flow to the plaintiff in execution.⁴³ A mere incidental benefit received by a third person is not sufficient.⁴⁴

The acceptance of a sum from one of several joint defendants and an agreement to release him from further liability also releases the other defendants and discharges the execution,⁴⁵ and a payment of money in consideration of a release of several executions will support the release in respect of all although credited on only one of them.⁴⁶

An unexplained dismissal of a levy creates, under some statutes, a presumption that the execution has been satisfied,⁴⁷ but the presumption may be rebutted.⁴⁸

§ 340. Applying or Indorsing Payments

Payment of an execution satisfies it without regard to whether the officer pays the money over to the creditor or misapplies it, although defendant is estopped to claim satisfaction if he consents to a misapplication. Payment is satisfaction although not indorsed on the writ.

Payment of an execution satisfies it without regard to whether the officer pays it over to the creditor or misapplies it,⁴⁹ and the debtor cannot reclaim the money before it is paid over.⁵⁰ If defendant consents to the sheriff's misapplication of the money, however, defendant is estopped to claim that the debt is satisfied.⁵¹

If a payment to the officer is conditional, he has no right to apply it in satisfaction of the writ where the condition is not performed.⁵² A direction to an officer by the execution creditor to pay over the money collected for his benefit, on an execution against him, has been held not to be a payment where the creditor in the latter execution is not a party, and has not agreed, to any such arrangement.⁵³

Where several executions have issued against a judgment debtor, he may, on making a payment to the officer, direct its application, and it must be applied as he directs.⁵⁴ The rule that a creditor hav-

Statute governing application of sale proceeds

A statute fixing the application, as between senior and junior liens, of the proceeds of execution sales does not apply to a voluntary payment to

ing several demands against the debtor may appropriate a payment to the demand which is least secure, unless the debtor at the time of the payment elects to have it appropriated to a different demand, does not apply to an involuntary payment under an execution.⁵⁵

Indorsing payments. Payment of an execution satisfies it although not indorsed on the writ.⁵⁶

§ 341. Entry of Satisfaction

Where the debt has been extinguished and satisfaction has not been entered, the debtor should move to have the entry made. Notice must be given plaintiff. The evidence in a proceeding for the entry of satisfaction must be confined to the issues, and, to warrant an order for entry, evidence of payment must be conclusive.

Where the debt has been extinguished and satisfaction has not been entered, the debtor should move to have the entry made;⁵⁷ his remedy is not in equity.⁵⁸

A creditor who has purchased at an execution sale of land may show, before he has received the conveyance, on a rule to show cause why satisfaction should not be entered, that the title was not in defendant, and that defendant was guilty of fraud in representing the title in himself.⁵⁹

Notice. Before a motion to enter satisfaction of, or a credit on, an execution can be made, notice must be given plaintiff.⁶⁰

Evidence. The evidence in a proceeding for entry of satisfaction must be confined to the issues;⁶¹ and entry of satisfaction should not be ordered by the court unless the evidence of payment is conclusive.⁶²

Irregular entry. The validity of a satisfaction which has not been entered in a manner prescribed by statute cannot be questioned, it has been held, by a person who was not a party to the cause at the time of the satisfaction.⁶³

§ 342. Evidence of Payment or Satisfaction

A sheriff's indorsement of payment on the writ, although not signed and not stating the date, is evidence of payment. A fieri facias which has not been returned is not evidence of satisfaction, but satisfaction may be proved although a return has not been made. A receipt in full or satisfaction indorsed on the writ raises a presumption that the whole amount due was paid before the return day and that the proper person received the money.

A sheriff's indorsement of payment on the writ, although not signed and not stating the date, is evidence of payment.⁶⁴ The word "paid," indorsed on an execution without any evidence that it was done by plaintiff or some one acting for him is not sufficient evidence, however, of such payment.⁶⁵ An entry of satisfaction by sale to the creditor, made by him, is no evidence of title in his favor;⁶⁶ and an indorsement of satisfaction on the writ by the attorney for the execution creditor has been held not evidence against anyone other than the execution creditor.⁶⁷

A fieri facias which has not been returned is not evidence that the debt has been satisfied;⁶⁸ but a party may prove an execution satisfied, although it has not been returned.⁶⁹

Evidence of payment and satisfaction of a judgment on which execution had issued has been held admissible on an issue as to the validity of a sale under a subsequent execution on the same judgment.⁷⁰

An admission of payment may sometimes be implied.⁷¹

Receipt of note or security. Since a sheriff is not permitted, without the consent of the judgment creditor, to receive anything but money in payment of an execution, see supra § 334 a, where he takes a note, indorses it on the execution and then returns it satisfied, the return is not conclusive,⁷² and, perhaps, not even prima facie,⁷³ evidence of satisfaction, unless it shows some authority for receiving the note, although as to the latter proposition the contrary has been held.⁷⁴ A return showing that the judgment had been satisfied by the judgment debtor is not evidence of such fact where the statement on the return was that security had been taken in satisfaction.⁷⁵

Presumptions. A receipt "in full" by the sheriff,⁷⁶ or the single word "satisfied,"⁷⁷ indorsed on the execution raises a presumption, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, that the whole amount due has been paid, although by actual calculation the aggregate of all the credits indorsed is less than the sum due.⁷⁸ The indorsement of satisfaction on an execution is an equivocal act, however, and is open to explanation by evidence as to the amount actually received.⁷⁹

The return of "satisfied" on an execution raises the presumption that the money due on it was paid before the return day,⁸⁰ and that the proper person received the money.⁸¹

Where receipts for part payments were given by the officer to the debtor, and later there was indorsed on the writ credits for a sum in excess of such receipts, it will be presumed that the sums for which the receipts were given were included in the credits afterward indorsed.⁸²

A previous payment and satisfaction of the execution will not be readily presumed as against a purchaser thereunder.⁸³

§ 343. Revival after Satisfaction

After an execution has been partly satisfied, the parties cannot, by canceling the receipt, revive it as to the sum paid, to the prejudice of subsequent execution creditors.

After an execution has been partly satisfied, the parties cannot, by canceling the receipt, revive it as to the sum paid, to the prejudice of subsequent execution creditors.⁸⁴

§ 344. Vacating Satisfaction

- a. In general
- b. Proceedings to obtain

a. In General

If an execution is returned as satisfied when for any reason there has been no satisfaction, and the plaintiff is entitled to another writ, the court may vacate the satisfaction and direct another writ to issue. After entry of satisfaction after a sale, no further execution can be issued on the judgment until the levy, sale, and entry of satisfaction are set aside and a new execution is awarded by order of the court.

If an execution is returned as satisfied, when for any reason there has been no satisfaction, and plaintiff is entitled to another writ, the court may vacate the satisfaction and direct another writ to issue.⁸⁵ Thus the indorsement or entry of satisfaction will be vacated where it was made by mistake when in fact there was no satisfaction,⁸⁶ where it was made wrongfully by the officer or by any other person without authority,⁸⁷ where the money was paid after the return day of the execution,⁸⁸ or where the judgment under which the sale took place was reversed.⁸⁹ Satisfaction entered on a void execution may be vacated,⁹⁰ and if the sale on which the satisfaction has been entered has proved void on account of an informality of the sheriff the entry of satisfaction may be vacated.⁹¹ An entry of satisfaction will not be vacated, however, by reason of the fact that defendant in execution recovered judgment against the sheriff for a wrongful sale of the property and plaintiff paid the judgment, he not being legally obliged to do so.⁹²

Where property is sold to satisfy an execution and the execution is returned satisfied although it appears that the title to the property sold was not in defendant, some courts allow a vacation of the satisfaction.⁹³ Other courts, however, deny such relief⁹⁴ in the absence of fraud on the part of defendant in his representation of title.⁹⁵ At any rate, a right to vacation of satisfaction does not extend to cases where defendant really has an interest in the property and the judgment creditor who purchases gets, without any fraud on the part of defendant,⁹⁶ a smaller estate than he contemplated.⁹⁷

Necessity for vacating. After entry of satisfaction of an execution after a sale of property levied on, no further execution can be issued on the judgment until the levy, sale, and entry of satisfaction are set aside and a new execution is awarded by order of the court.⁹⁸

Finality of adjudication. An adjudication that a return of satisfaction should be quashed and that a new execution should issue makes all questions in issue on the hearing of the motion, of which defendant had notice, res judicata.⁹⁹ However, failure to obtain relief under a statute does not preclude a resort to equity.¹

b. Proceedings to Obtain

The usual methods of obtaining a vacation of satisfaction and the issuance of a new execution are by writ of scire facias, bill in equity, or motion or order to show cause. A proceeding to set aside an entry of satisfaction must be brought with due diligence.

The usual methods of obtaining a vacation of satisfaction and the issuance of a new execution are by writ of scire facias,² bill in equity,³ or motion or order to show cause.⁴

A motion to set aside the entry of satisfaction must be served on defendant;⁵ and, where property of a third person is sold, the credit on the execution will not be canceled in a proceeding to which the purchaser is not a party, where it does not appear that the money had ever been refunded.⁶

Diligence. A proceeding to set aside the entry of satisfaction must be brought with due diligence.⁷

XIV. SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS

§ 345. Nature and Purpose

Supplementary proceedings are statutory proceedings designed to aid judgment creditors in the discovery of the debtor's property and its application in satisfaction of the judgment.

Supplementary proceedings are purely statutory proceedings⁸ in which the court where the action is pending is called on to exercise its jurisdiction in aid of the judgment in the action.⁹ Such proceedings are said to be an extraordinary remedy,¹⁰ largely equitable in their nature,¹¹ intended to reach dishonest debtors,¹² and generally are only to be

Additional or equitable executions

Supplementary proceedings are in the nature of additional or equitable executions—Ex parte Roddey, supra, quoting Corpus Juris—23 C.J. p 826 note 22.

Quasi-equitable

Under code provisions which abolish the distinction between law and equity, supplementary proceedings are quasi-equitable in character.—The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Marlboro Cotton Mills, D.C.S.C., 278 F. 816, modified on other grounds, C. C.A., 282 F. 811, certiorari denied Marlboro Cotton Mills v. resorted to when the ordinary processes of the law are not adequate.¹³

The purpose of supplementary proceedings is to aid judgment creditors in the collection of their judgments.¹⁴ They furnish a method whereby a judgment creditor may obtain a discovery of property of the judgment debtor,¹⁵ either in his possession or control or in the possession or control of another,¹⁶ and have it applied to the satisfaction of the judgment.¹⁷ The purpose, so far as an examination of the judgment debtor is concerned, is to discover property rather than the application of that which is already known.¹⁸ Supplementary proceedings are in part a summary method of purging the debtor's conscience and compelling the disclosure of any property he may have which is not exempt from execution.¹⁹ Such proceedings are not a substitute for an execution but are merely intended to supplement it by reaching assets which could not be obtained thereby.²⁰

Supplementary proceedings should not be perverted to other purposes;²¹ they are not to be used as a club to enforce settlements of claims which the debtor is without property to pay,²² or to obtain evidence for use on the trial of another action.²³

Civil proceedings; proceedings in personam. Supplementary proceedings are civil as distinguished from criminal proceedings.²⁴ They are proceedings in personam and not in rem;²⁵ but it has been said that they operate in rem.²⁶

Independent proceeding. In some states supplementary proceedings are regarded as a proceeding in the original action, auxiliary and supplementary thereto;²⁷ in other states they are independent actions or proceedings,²⁸ particularly where a third

Liquidation of debtor's affairs

The court in supplementary proceedings does not undertake to wind up the debtor's affairs and the procedure is in no sense a fair liquidation, and although it portions out the debtor's assets among those creditors who are parties to action, it does not do so on any basis of equality.—Nick v. Ability to pay

Design of statute as to supplementary procedure is to provide inquiry into judgment debtor's ability to pay his legal obligation, to relieve him from harassment if found unable to pay, but to compel him to do what an honest man ought to be willing to do if found able to pay in whole or in part.—Goldman v. In New York

(1) Supplementary proceedings are not proceedings in an action or part person is joined,²⁹ and the rules of procedure governing civil actions generally are applied.³⁰ It has been said that a supplementary proceeding is part of the original action in the sense that it proceeds out of and takes the same number on the docket as the original cause, but that it is essentially a new and independent action involving different issues.³¹

Special proceeding. Technically a supplementary proceeding is not a special proceeding where not expressly so designated by statute.³²

Substitute for creditors' bill. It is generally held that supplementary proceedings are a substitute for, or perform the same functions as, a creditors' bill.³³ In most states all the relief that can be obtained by a creditor's bill may be had in these proceedings,³⁴ and the general principles prevailing in suits of the nature of creditors' bills are properly applicable to these proceedings so far as they have not been changed by statute or are not obviously inconsistent with the new remedy;³⁵ but, unlike creditors bills, supplementary proceedings operate only for the benefit of the creditors who institute the proceedings.³⁶

Substitute for capias or garnishment. In some jurisdictions supplementary proceedings are deemed a substitute for the capias ad satisfaciendum which formerly existed.³⁷ They are sometimes deemed analogous to, and in most aspects a substitute for, the process of garnishment.³⁸

§ 346. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

Statutes as to supplementary proceedings are generally held to be valid and to apply to the enforcement of judgments rendered prior to the effective date of the statute.

According to some authorities statutes providing for supplementary proceedings are in derogation of the common law³⁹ and must be strictly construed;⁴⁰ the remedy cannot be enlarged by construction nor be made available or valid except by

of the original action.—Dunn v. Seidenschwarz, 18 N.Y.S.2d 264, 173 Misc. 495—23 C.J. p 827 note 51.

(2) Orders therein are not orders in the action.—Harris v. Weiss, 105 N.Y.S. 8.

(3) However, an order requiring the judgment debtor to appear for examination is an order in an action so far as to authorize its service in any part of the state.—Deane v. Sire, 95 N.Y.S. 556, 48 Misc. 606.

(4) Under the former code they were proceedings in the action in which the judgment was recovered, and were held to be in the nature of new remedies or equitable rights, arising by force of the statute, in the action in which the judgment had been recovered.—Wright v. Nostrand, 94 N.Y. 31—23 C.J. p 827 notes 46, 47.

strictly following the directions of the statute;⁴¹ and any step taken therein must be authorized by the statute.⁴² However, it has also been stated that such statutes are remedial and should be liberally construed.⁴³

Statutes relating to supplementary proceedings will be construed so as to give effect to every one of them;⁴⁴ where they conflict, the statute most recently enacted will prevail.⁴⁵

Although the statutes in the several states are by no means uniform in all particulars, the most comprehensive statutory provision for supplementary proceedings, that existing in New York, has been copied to a considerable extent in several other states.⁴⁶

Validity of statutes. Statutes providing for or governing supplementary proceedings have generally been held valid.⁴⁷ A federal statute authorizing supplementary proceedings in accordance with the state practice for the collection of judgments recovered in common-law actions in the United States courts does not conflict with the provisions of the federal constitution recognizing the distinctions between law and equity;⁴⁸ nor is a statute authorizing a probate judge, when not sitting in court, to entertain supplementary proceedings in aid of an action pending in another court a violation of a constitutional provision prescribing and limiting the jurisdiction of the probate court.⁴⁹

An act which makes no provision that no answer which the debtor may be required to make shall be used against him in any criminal prosecution is in violation of a constitutional provision that no person shall be compelled to give testimony which may incriminate him.⁵⁰ Conversely, where such a provision is made, the statute is constitutional.⁵¹ A statute authorizing the court to permit the judgment creditor to sue a third person who is a debtor of the judgment debtor is void where it fails to provide for notice to the judgment debtor before such permission is given.⁵²

Retrospective effect. Statutes governing supplementary proceedings are generally held to be retrospective and to apply to proceedings for the collection of judgments rendered before the statute became effective,⁵³ unless they give a remedy where none existed before.⁵⁴

§ 347. Persons Entitled to Maintain Proceedings

Supplementary proceedings may be maintained by such persons as the judgment creditor, his agent, assignee, or representative.

Supplementary proceedings may be maintained by the judgment creditor,⁵⁵ and, where such proceedings are authorized by statute, the judgment creditor is entitled as of right to pursue such remedy.⁵⁶ The judgment creditor is the only one who can institute the proceedings.⁵⁷ That is, the proceedings may be maintained only by a judgment creditor as distinguished from a simple contract creditor,⁵⁸ and as distinguished from a person who is neither a judgment creditor nor a person authorized to act for him.⁵⁹ The term "judgment creditor" as used in this connection is broad enough to signify a person who is authorized or entitled to collect or otherwise enforce a money judgment.⁶⁰ One subrogated to the judgment creditor's rights may maintain such proceedings.⁶¹

Supplementary proceedings cannot be instituted by a person in his individual capacity against himself in his representative capacity.⁶²

Agent, attorney, or representative of creditor. The duly authorized agents of the judgment creditor,⁶³ such as his attorney,⁶⁴ may institute supplementary proceedings, as may the personal representatives of a deceased judgment creditor,⁶⁵ and it is not necessary that the latter should have the judgment revived or continued before proceeding to enforce it.⁶⁶

If the authority of an attorney has ended with the death of plaintiff, proceedings thereafter must be taken in the name of the personal representatives or successors in interest of deceased plaintiff.⁶⁷ Where the attorney has a lien on the judgment for his own costs and fees, which his client refuses to pay, he may enforce the judgment through these proceedings to collect the sum due to him.⁶⁸

judgment,⁶⁹ either in his own name, or in the name of his assignor, the original judgment creditor.⁷⁰ He may maintain the proceedings even where the assignment was made after the return of execution unsatisfied,⁷¹ and notwithstanding the death of the original judgment creditor.⁷²

Receiver. Where the judgment creditor is a corporation in the hands of a receiver, the receiver may institute supplementary proceedings in the name of the corporation.⁷³ After the title to the judgment has passed from the client to a receiver, an attorney must procure leave of the court to institute the proceedings.⁷⁴

A receiver appointed in supplementary proceedings is not entitled to seek an examination of a third person in the supplementary proceedings.⁷⁵

Stockholders. A minority stockholder who recovers a judgment in favor of the corporation against its directors may bring supplementary proceedings on behalf of the corporation to collect the judgment.⁷⁶

§ 348. Persons against Whom Proceedings May Be Maintained

Supplementary proceedings ordinarily may be maintained against any judgment debtor, but whether such proceedings are available against a corporate judgment debtor depends on the statutes in the particular jurisdiction.

If the requisite jurisdictional facts exist, ordinarily supplementary proceedings may be maintained against any judgment debtor,⁷⁷ including infants,⁷⁸ a lunatic,⁷⁹ or trustees against whom judgment has been recovered as such,⁸⁰ and, it seems, a sheriff against whom execution has issued.⁸¹ The proceedings may be maintained against a married woman.⁸² The proceedings may be maintained against joint debtors,⁸³ or against one or more of several debtors;⁸⁴ but a discharged bankrupt⁸⁵ or a foreign consul⁸⁶ will not be compelled to submit to an examination in supplementary proceedings.

After a judgment against a corporation, where the judgment creditor is permitted to issue execution against stockholders, the stockholders are not judgment debtors as against whom supplementary proceedings may be maintained.⁸⁷

Corporations. Whether supplementary proceedings may be maintained against a corporation which is the judgment debtor depends on the statutes and practice of the jurisdiction in which the remedy is sought; in some jurisdictions the remedy has been allowed,⁸⁸ while in others it has been denied.⁸⁹

Municipal corporations are not subject to examination as a judgment debtor, where it is not expressly so provided by statute.⁹⁰

Third persons. Where the statute so provides, the court has the power to bring in and implead third persons when relief against them seems warranted.⁹¹ The examination of third persons in supplementary proceedings is treated infra § 362.

Utah.—Cleverly v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for states it has been held that whatever can be reached by a creditor's bill can be reached by these proceedings.⁹⁴ In some states only property that the debtor could sue for can be reached, where in the hands of, or owing by, a third person.⁹⁵

It has been held that property which can be reached by supplementary proceedings includes money fraudulently withheld by the debtor,⁹⁶ an interest in a partnership,⁹⁷ patents and copyrights,⁹⁸ property held by a municipality,⁹⁹ property retained by the debtor after a general assignment for the benefit of creditors,¹ dower after the death of the husband but not admeasured,² proceeds of a mortgage taken as security for a legacy and assigned without consideration,³ and property in another state.⁴ The interest of a chattel mortgagor, although the mortgage is past due, may be reached, where the mortgage provides for turning over to the mortgagor any surplus arising from the sale.⁵ Money received from the federal government for goods sold to it may be reached.⁶

On the other hand, it has been held that contingent fees of an attorney in an undetermined case,⁷ the interest of a mortgagee in personal property,⁸ money transferred by the judgment debtor to its fiscal agent under an indenture irrevocably authorizing the agent to pay interest on the debtor's bonds with such money,⁹ money deposited by a third person as bail,¹⁰ or public moneys or moneys in the hands of a public officer¹¹ cannot be reached in supplementary proceedings. In some states a vested interest in real estate cannot be sold in supplementary proceedings since it may be sold under execution.¹²

After-acquired property. The proceedings affect only property which the debtor has at the time the order for his examination is served, and not property thereafter acquired,¹³ although according to some authorities property acquired by the debtor after the issuance of the order for examination but before the time of hearing may be reached.¹⁴

Rents accruing under an existing lease are not after-acquired property.¹⁵

Alimony. Alimony awarded to the debtor cannot ordinarily be reached in supplementary proceedings where the claim antedates the allowance of alimony,¹⁶ but it may be reached in such proceedings on a claim arising after alimony has been allowed, particularly where the claim is for necessities.¹⁷

Choses in action. A chose in action owned by the judgment debtor may be reached in supplementary proceedings,¹⁸ unless the claim is one that is nonassignable.¹⁹ The liability of a third person to the judgment debtor may be reached where it is a present, fixed liability;²⁰ a contingent or uncertain liability cannot be reached.²¹ A judgment recov-

Deposit for gas and electricity

Deposit by consumer with company as security for payment of gas and electricity did not give company "property" of consumer or ered by the judgment debtor,²² shares of corporate stock belonging to the debtor and deemed to be in the possession of the corporation,²³ an annuity,²⁴ a right of action on contract,²⁵ a cause of action for trespass to realty which will survive,²⁶ or a vested interest in the funds of an organization evidenced by a certificate of membership²⁷ may be reached. United States bonds may be reached in a state court by supplementary proceedings the same as any other property.²⁸

On the other hand, it has been held that a check not yet delivered to or accepted by the debtor,²⁹ corporate bonds which are still in the hands of the corporation, its agents, or trustees, and which have not yet become property by negotiation or passing into the hands of holders for value,³⁰ may not be reached in supplementary proceedings.

Equitable interests. In some jurisdictions equitable interests not subject to execution cannot be reached in supplementary proceedings,³¹ but in other states equitable interests may be reached.³²

Membership in exchange. A transferable seat or membership in an exchange may be reached in supplementary proceedings,³³ provided the court has the power to compel an involuntary transfer of the membership.³⁴

Property in custody of law. Property in the custody of the law cannot be reached without an order of the court in whose custody the property is.³⁵

Ownership or possession of property. If the judgment debtor is not the owner of the property or the title thereto is in dispute, it cannot except as the statute may provide for the determination of title ordinarily be reached in supplementary proceedings,³⁶ or at least, where the title is in dispute, it can be reached only by an action by the receiver or judgment creditor, as discussed infra §§ 383, 384, 393. Where the judgment debtor is in possession of the property and there is no real or serious dispute as to his ownership of it, it may be reached.³⁷

Property assigned prior to the commencement of supplementary proceedings cannot be reached,³⁸ except by an action to set the assignment aside where it is fraudulent or otherwise invalid, as discussed infra § 393. Under the statutes in some jurisdictions a judgment creditor who serves a third party order or subpoena on a third party debtor takes precedence over a subsequent assignee of the judgment debtor.³⁹

Refund on license

As respects whether state comp-troller had any property of liquor licensee as to which judgment creditor of licensee could institute third-party supplementary proceeding, possibility that licensee might surrender its license in future and so become entitled to refund did not create "property" or "indebtedness" within meaning of statute.—*Heilman v. § 350. — Exempt Property

Property which is exempt from execution cannot be reached for the benefit of a judgment creditor in supplementary proceedings.

Property exempt from levy and sale on execution, or its proceeds, cannot be appropriated in supplementary proceedings.⁴⁰ For instance, on this ground it has been held that a pension,⁴¹ a watch used by the debtor in his occupation⁴² rather than worn merely as an ornament,⁴³ a share in a law library held by a lawyer as a working tool,⁴⁴ and a judgment for the conversion of exempt property or the proceeds of such judgment⁴⁵ may not be reached in supplementary proceedings. Property without the state, belonging to a nonresident debtor, which would be exempt if within the state, cannot be reached.⁴⁶ It is doubtful where an exemption is claimed whether the question of its validity can be determined in these proceedings.⁴⁷

Insurance policies and proceeds thereof. It has been held that a life policy as to which insured has a property right and a surrender value may be reached by insured's judgment creditors in supplementary proceedings.⁴⁸ However, an insurance policy validly assigned to a third person before judgment may not be reached.⁴⁹

Under a statute providing that a policy payable to a third person as beneficiary shall not be subject to the claims of insured's creditors, a judgment creditor of the insured cannot reach such policy even though the judgment creditor is the beneficiary and has the power to change the beneficiary,⁵⁰ or although insured retains the right to change the beneficiary.⁵¹ Where the beneficiary dies and the policy thereby becomes payable to insured's estate, judgment creditors of insured can reach it.⁵²

Industrial policies, payable to insured's estate or to his blood relatives where they are equitably entitled to the proceeds as reimbursement for expenditures made in connection with insured's illness or death have been held to be⁵³ and not to be⁵⁴ subject in supplementary proceedings to the claim of a judgment creditor of insured. It has been held that the court may, in its discretion, refuse to compel a judgment debtor to turn over an industrial policy which has no present surrender value and the premiums on which have been paid with pension money.⁵⁵

Money due the judgment debtor as exclusive beneficiary of a health and accident policy may be reached in supplementary proceedings,⁵⁶ and the same is true as to disability benefits due to insured under a life insurance policy although the surrender value and the proceeds payable on death are exempt.⁵⁷

Although the interest of a wife as beneficiary of a policy on the life of her husband cannot be reached by her judgment creditors during his life,⁵⁸ the proceeds of the policy may be reached on the husband's death.⁵⁹

Even where the policy is exempt, the exemption may not attach to money borrowed on the policy.⁶⁰

or subpoena on a third party debtor, took precedence over the rights of the judgment creditor.—Prospect Coal Co., Inc. v. Commercial Credit Corporation, 293 N.Y.S. 231, 161 Misc. 780—Weinberg v. Schwartz, 14 N.Y. S.2d 564.

(2) The same rule applied to an assignment which did not become effective until after the service of the third party order or subpoena.—Weinberg v. Schwartz, supra.

(3) However, even before the statutory change, there was authority that the transfer of a debt by the judgment debtor to a third party after the service of a stay order on the third party debtor did not take the debt beyond the judgment creditor's reach in supplementary proceedings.—*Lebowitz v. § 351. — Trust Property

Property held in trust for the judgment debtor, unless exempt by statute, can be reached in supplementary proceedings.

Property held in trust for the judgment debtor can be reached in supplementary proceedings unless by statute such property is exempt.⁶¹ In some jurisdictions, by statute, money or other property held in trust for the debtor cannot be reached by these proceedings where the trust was created by, or the trust fund proceeded from, a person other than the debtor,⁶² unless the trust has been so far performed that the fund is payable directly to the debtor.⁶³ A legacy in the hands of an executor, on no trust except to pay it over to the legatee, is not a trust created by some person other than the debtor himself.⁶⁴ Death benefits paid by a fraternal order to the beneficiary of a deceased member, and thereafter deposited in trust for the benefit of such beneficiary, is a trust created by a person for her own benefit within the statute.⁶⁵

The income of personalty originally belonging to the debtor and held under an invalid trust for his support may be reached,⁶⁶ as may a fund created by the debtor himself from the sale of his own property,⁶⁷ and where money is apparently held in trust for the debtor, but in reality it is so held to protect him, it may be reached.⁶⁸

§ 352. — Earnings in General

Unless exempted by statute, the earnings of the judgment debtor may be reached in supplementary proceedings.

Earnings of the judgment debtor may be reached in supplementary proceedings in the absence of a statute to the contrary.⁶⁹

However, in some jurisdictions the statute expressly provides that earnings of the debtor for his personal services, rendered within a specified time next before the institution of the proceedings or the order, are exempt when necessary for the use of a family wholly or partly supported by his labor.⁷⁰ There is considerable confusion in construing such statutes, as to what are "earnings" for "personal" services, within the meaning of that phrase as used therein.⁷¹ The terms are sufficiently broad to include not only wages but also a pecuniary benefit indirectly accruing.⁷² It has been held that the proceeds of a saloon business,⁷³ or a retail ice business where two carts and several men are employed,⁷⁴ or moneys earned but turned into the business of the employer,⁷⁵ or income from boarders,⁷⁶ or advances against royalties that may accrue on books not yet sold⁷⁷ are not exempt. On the other hand, it has been held that personal earnings include earnings of one in charge of others who himself performs some part of the labor,⁷⁸ earnings for services rendered by a husband to his wife in her separate business,⁷⁹ earnings in a business carried on independently where the debtor's services are the chief factor,⁸⁰ and tuition fees.⁸¹ If the debtor is running a business or the like, his personal earnings have been held in some cases to be the net profits realized from it.⁸² Necessity for use of a family will not ordinarily be presumed where the salary is quite large, but must be shown.⁸³ A salary is not exempt as necessary for the support of the debtor's family where its intended use is for the support of persons as to whom there is no legal liability.⁸⁴ The judgment creditor cannot compel the debtor to exact compensation for services rendered under the understanding that they were gratuitous.⁸⁵

Future earnings. In the absence of a special statute permitting such income to be reached, see infra §§ 383, 406, future earnings, wages, or salaries to become due, or which become due after service of the order for examination, cannot be reached by supplementary proceedings.⁸⁶ If there is no showing as to when money was earned, it will be presumed to have been earned before the service of the order for examination.⁸⁷ Where a doubt exists as to whether the sum in controversy was earned prior or subsequent to the order, the debtor is entitled to the benefit of the doubt.⁸⁸

§ 353. — Salaries of Public Officers or Employees

Except as statutes may otherwise provide, the compensation of a public employee cannot be reached in supplementary proceedings until it is in the employee's possession.

Unless otherwise provided by statute, it is generally held that for reasons of public policy the wages, fees, or salary of a public official, due or to become due from the public authorities, cannot be subjected in their hands to the payment of his debts under proceedings supplementary to execution instituted for that purpose;⁸⁹ but salary or earnings of such an official which he has reduced to possession

may be subjected to payment of the judgment.⁹⁰

§ 354. Time for Proceedings

Supplementary proceedings must be instituted within the time fixed by statute, although objections may be waived by appearance and submission to examination.

The time within which proceedings must be instituted depends on the terms of the statute under which the remedy is sought.⁹¹ Generally the proceedings cannot be commenced⁹² or prosecuted⁹³ after the judgment has become dormant. Even though no time is limited, the proceedings must nevertheless be commenced within a reasonable time after the right accrues.⁹⁴ If the commencement of the proceedings is not limited to any time after entry of judgment, they may be instituted at any time during the life of the judgment,⁹⁵ especially where an execution has been issued during that time.⁹⁶ Supplementary proceedings are not "an action on a judgment" within a provision requiring such actions to be commenced within six years.⁹⁷

Waiver of delay. The fact that proceedings are commenced after the statutory time provided therefor, or after the judgment has ceased to be a lien, is an objection which may be waived by appearing and submitting to an examination,⁹⁸ and cannot be reserved for a motion to vacate a final order in which the proceedings result.⁹⁹

§ 355. Simultaneous and Successive Proceedings

- a. Simultaneous proceedings
- b. Successive proceedings

a. Simultaneous Proceedings

Proceedings by separate judgment creditors may be maintained at the same time in the absence of statutory restrictions.

The right of a judgment creditor to maintain supplementary proceedings is not precluded by reason of the fact that other supplementary proceedings by other creditors are pending against the same debtor.¹ The only restrictions are that the creditors prosecuting the prior proceedings shall be notified of the present proceeding; that an examination shall first be had in the prior proceeding, especially if it is being diligently prosecuted; and that only one receiver shall be appointed.² The right to an examination of a third party after appointment of a receiver is discussed infra § 362. The effect of an assignment for the benefit of creditors on proceedings supplementary to execution is discussed in Assignments for Benefit of Creditors § 162 a (1).

b. Successive Proceedings

Successive examinations may be permitted where not instituted merely to harass the judgment debtor.

While the creditor is not restricted to one examination,³ he will not be permitted to institute successive proceedings for examination merely in order to harass the judgment debtor.⁴ Ordinarily a judgment creditor is entitled to examine his debtor only once,⁵ even though he has two or more judgments;⁶ and two orders on the same judgment cannot be enforced at the same time,⁷ so that a second order is improper where the original order is still in force or outstanding.⁸ An exception exists where the second order is obtained for the purpose of examining the debtor concerning property of which he has come into possession since the first examination, and concerning which he cannot be examined under the first order. In such case the second order does not of itself supersede the first,⁹ nor is it necessary to have the first order vacated before obtaining the second; the proceedings under the first order, if not already closed or abandoned, may be consolidated with the proceedings under the new order.¹⁰ Where it is provided by statute that the proceedings can be discontinued or dismissed only by order of the judge, failure to enter orders on decisions dismissing former orders for examination precludes a new order for examination;¹¹ but, if an order of dismissal is made, the debtor cannot object that it was not entered, to defeat a second order for his examination, since if the entry thereof is required it is the duty of the successful party to make it.¹² A dismissal or discontinuance without an examination does not preclude a second order based on the same facts,¹³ nor does the termination of prior proceedings by consent,¹⁴ or by failure to proceed thereunder,¹⁵ without the entry of an order of discontinuance. Where the first examination was not concluded, otherwise than by a vacation of the order therefor, a further examination founded on another judgment and order will not be considered a second examination or as harassing.¹⁶ The vacation of a third party order before termination of the proceeding does not prohibit the service of another such order, where the prior order was vacated under the mistaken belief that the proceeding had been closed.¹⁷

Third party proceedings

In proceeding to compel former husband of judgment debtor to pay alimony to judgment creditor, irregularity of not issuing third party subpoena within two years from recovery of judgment, as required by statute, was waived, where husband did not in stipulation for adjournment nor in affidavit in lieu of examination state any reservation as to his rights because of irregularity.—*Conlew, Inc. v. Examination by one judgment creditor does not affect the right of every other judgment creditor to at least one examination of the debtor.¹⁸

Grounds. To warrant an order for a second examination after one examination has been had, facts arising or ascertained after such examination and warranting a further examination must be shown,¹⁹ such as that subsequent to the examination the judgment debtor has acquired property²⁰ and that an alias execution has been issued and returned nulla bona.²¹ As is pointed out infra § 366, the granting of a second order rests in the sound discretion of the judge.

§ 356. Existence of Other Remedy

The creditor may be compelled to elect between supplementary proceedings and other remedies which are not made concurrent by statute.

The institution of a creditor's suit does not preclude the institution²² or maintenance²³ of supplementary proceedings; the remedies are concurrent and may be pursued simultaneously.²⁴ Neither are pending proceedings affected by the issuance of a second execution²⁵ or the levy thereof, unless it is clear that such levy will be sufficient to satisfy the judgment,²⁶ in which latter case the creditor may be compelled to elect which remedy he will pursue.²⁷ While it has been held that the institution by the creditor of a suit to set aside a transfer or assignment by the judgment debtor does not preclude the institution and maintenance of supplementary proceedings,²⁸ the contrary position was later taken in the same jurisdiction on the ground that an order for examination would be useless, the court being without power in supplementary proceedings to try the validity of the transfer and to order a re-transfer and application of the property in question to the payment of the judgment.²⁹

Attachment and garnishee process. The levy of an attachment does not affect the right of a judgment creditor to institute and maintain supplementary proceedings.³⁰ Under a statute authorizing both garnishee executions and supplementary proceedings, however, it has been held that a creditor who elects to take advantage of one remedy is debarred from taking advantage of the other while the first is being pursued.³¹ Equity will not entertain a bill for the purpose of summarily compelling a garnishee to satisfy a levy on rights and credits of a judgment debtor unless the remedy at law is inadequate.³²

Existence of other property. Where the statute merely requires a showing that execution has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, the judgment debtor cannot avoid the proceeding by showing that there was property on which the sheriff might have levied.³³

§ 357. Stay of Proceedings

Supplementary proceedings may, in the discretion of the judge, be stayed if there is sound reason therefor.

A stay of the proceedings can be granted on application therefor by the judge before whom they are pending.³⁴ While it is within the discretion

Direction as effecting stay

Where, after service of third-party subpoena directed to a corporation allegedly indebted to judgment debtor, a motion was made in mu-of the judge to grant or refuse the application,³⁵ the right to proceedings after judgment in aid of execution cannot even be temporarily withheld from a judgment creditor without sound reason.³⁶ It is a good reason for staying or suspending the proceedings that the debtor has been discharged as an insolvent³⁷ or bankrupt.³⁸ The proceedings will not be stayed because the creditor has availed himself of concurrent remedies, such as a creditor's suit,³⁹ or because an appeal has been taken from the judgment,⁴⁰ unless security is given and a stay procured.⁴¹ A stay of proceedings on an execution does not preclude the creditor from examining a third party.⁴² A stay pending the decision of a motion does not affect an existing injunction restraining the disposition of property.⁴³

§ 358. Jurisdiction and Authority of Court or Judge

- a. In general

a. In General

Supplementary proceedings being purely statutory, the courts have no inherent jurisdiction respecting them.

The jurisdiction of supplementary proceedings⁴⁴ and the place in which they must be brought⁴⁵ are based on, and regulated by, statute. The remedy being purely statutory, jurisdiction to act and to make orders in the proceedings exists and may be exercised when, and only when, it is conferred by statute.⁴⁶ Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by the mere appearance of the debtor and his submission to examination without objection,⁴⁷ and even by consent of all the parties interested, greater juris-isdiction of the county or supreme court, but properly brought before a justice of the municipal court.—Corn Exch. Bank v. Hirschberg, 205 N.Y.S. 651, 123 Misc. 436—*R. M. Hollingshead Co. v. diction cannot be conferred on the court or judge than is conferred by statute.⁴⁸ The denial to certain courts of jurisdiction in equity cases will not preclude them from entertaining supplementary proceedings.⁴⁹ Ordinarily jurisdiction once acquired continues until the termination of the proceeding.⁵⁰ While as a matter of propriety all proceedings based on the same judgment should be had before the same officer,⁵¹ this rule will not preclude another judge from entertaining proceedings based on the same judgment against other parties.⁵² The jurisdiction may be concurrent or so conferred as to permit the judges of one court, on the observance of certain formalities, to entertain proceedings on judgments rendered in another court or jurisdiction,⁵³ and ordinarily the entertaining of the proceedings in one court in accordance with the statutory authority will not operate to oust the other court of jurisdiction.⁵⁴ The fact that an executor is acting under the direction of a court of one county does not prevent a court of another county from requiring him to answer in supplementary proceedings.⁵⁵

Scope and extent. The scope and extent of the court's jurisdiction in supplementary proceedings is dependent on the terms of the statute under which it is exercised.⁵⁶ In general, the court has power to make all lawful orders necessary to make the remedy effective,⁵⁷ although it may not decide issues arising between the executing officer and third persons⁵⁸ or make a contract between the judgment debtor and third persons.⁵⁹ Where there is no adverse claim to property involved by strangers to the action, the court may make such order with respect to it as the evident justice of the case requires.⁶⁰ If the procedure with reference to determining rights is not fixed by statute, but the judge is given a broad power to prescribe what, in his discretion, may be the proper proceeding, such procedure must be provided as will give all claimants in interest a hearing,⁶¹ and the court has the power, and it is its duty, to summon all adverse claimants into court and require them to set up their rights.⁶² The court may inquire into existing defenses, such as the applicability of a discharge in bankruptcy to the judgment.⁶³ The court, having jurisdiction over the debtor's person, may order the application to the judgment of the debtor's property held by a nonresident.⁶⁴

Applicability of general statute

The act of 1901, P.L. p 372, entitled a "further supplement to an act entitled 'An act respecting any execution,'" and authorizing proceedings supplemental to execution, is applicable to the district courts, although the district court act itself makes provision for supplemental proceedings.—Hershenstein v. Adjudication of rights of third persons

In proceeding supplementary to execution, rights of third persons holding assets claimed by them adversely to plaintiff and defendant should not be adjudicated, unless such persons are made parties by voluntary intervention or by service of appropriate rule nisi, and are given opportunity to present their claims as parties fully and fairly after making up of definite issues to be tried.—State ex rel. Phoenix Tax Title Corporation v. Viney, 163 So. 57, 120 Fla. 657.—Ryan's Furniture Exchange v. McNair, 162 So. 483, 120 Fla. 109. Determination of disputed ownership or possession on examination see infra § 378 c.

Rule nisi

In proceeding supplementary to execution to reach property but concealed or held under color of title in third person, but in trust for, or derived from, defendant, where third person claims such property adversely to defendant and plaintiff, third party claimant should be made party by rule nisi and should be given statutory opportunity to file claim affidavit and claim bond for property ordered to be levied on if third party wishes to acquire immediate repossession prior to hearing and trial on the rule nisi.—Ryan's Furniture Exchange v. McNair, supra.

b. Judge or Court

Under some statutes orders in supplementary proceedings may be made either by a judge or by the court, but under others the power belongs to the judge alone.

Under some statutes the power to grant orders in supplementary proceedings belongs to the judge alone and not to any court;⁶⁵ and orders made are judge's orders and not court orders.⁶⁶ The judge has sole and exclusive jurisdiction over the proceedings until they are finally disposed of, and no other judge or officer at chambers has any power to come in and stay such proceedings by a general order.⁶⁷ It is immaterial that an order purports to have been made by the court, when in fact it was made by the sole judge thereof.⁶⁸ Under other statutes the orders may be made either by a judge or by the court,⁶⁹ and in some instances by court commissioners.⁷⁰ If a judge makes the order to appear for examination returnable before himself on a certain day, but he is no longer a judge at such time, the debtor must appear before his successor at the time and place designated in the order.⁷¹

§ 359. Grounds and Conditions Precedent in General

The grounds for and conditions precedent to the maintenance of supplementary proceedings depend on the particular statute involved.

The grounds for, and conditions precedent to, the maintenance of supplementary proceedings are regulated by statute.⁷² Where a compliance with the terms of the statute is shown, a judgment creditor is entitled to maintain the proceedings,⁷³ but he should not be permitted to harass the judgment debtor to no purpose.⁷⁴

§ 360. — Judgment or Order

- a. Necessity
- b. Requisites and sufficiency

a. Necessity

The recovery and entry of a valid judgment or order for the payment of money is a condition precedent to the institution of supplementary proceedings.

The recovery and entry of a valid judgment,⁷⁵ or of an order for the payment of money,⁷⁶ is a condition precedent to the institution of supplementary proceedings.

b. Requisites and Sufficiency

- (1) In general
- (2) Appearance or personal service
- (3) Amount

(1) In General

Supplementary proceedings may generally be instituted on any valid money judgment by which the person of the judgment debtor is bound and which remains wholly or partially unsatisfied.

In order to constitute the basis for supplementary proceedings, a judgment must remain wholly or partially unsatisfied,⁷⁷ when once it is ascertained that for any reason since there is no longer any judgment the proceedings to enforce it must fall to the ground.⁷⁸ Thus, if the judgment is extinguished by payment⁷⁹ or a release,⁸⁰ or a discharge in bankruptcy,⁸¹ it cannot be the basis of supplementary proceedings. However, partial payment of the judgment does not preclude proceedings to recover the balance,⁸² and this is true where the principal but not the interest is paid.⁸³

As a general rule supplementary proceedings can be instituted on any money judgment which remains unsatisfied in whole or in part.⁸⁴ It is usually required, however, that the judgment be one by which the person of the judgment debtor is bound;⁸⁵ and under the terms of some statutes the judgment must be one which is a lien on real property.⁸⁶ Under other statutes the remedy seems to be confined to judgments for necessaries.⁸⁷ Proceedings supplementary to execution cannot be sustained on a judgment in rem⁸⁸ or on a foreign judgment.⁸⁹ They may be based on a federal judgment, or on an order of a federal judge, where authorized by a statute of the state in which judgment was rendered,⁹⁰ but docketing a federal judgment with the county clerk does not authorize supplementary proceedings in a state court.⁹¹ A judgment against an executor or an administrator in his representative,⁹² as distinguished from his individual,⁹³ capacity is not enforceable by supplementary proceedings; neither is a judgment against a person as a representative of unincorporated associates so enforceable.⁹⁴ On compliance with statutes making a judgment of a municipal court a judgment of a higher court on its being docketed, or a transcript thereof filed, in the office of the county clerk, it may be enforced by supplementary proceedings as a judgment of the higher court.⁹⁵

Void and voidable judgments. If the judgment on which the proceedings are based is void, the proceedings are themselves void,⁹⁶ but, as is pointed out infra § 378 b, in proceedings of this character it is erroneous to review the regularity of the judgment or the merits of the action in which it was recovered. Mere clerical errors in the judgment do not invalidate supplementary proceedings based thereon.⁹⁷

Judgment against defendant in fictitious name. The proceedings may be instituted against a judgment debtor on a judgment against him under a fictitious name, where his real name is unknown,⁹⁸ provided he is sufficiently described to enable execution to be issued and levied against him.⁹⁹ Where his true name is subsequently discovered the supplementary proceedings must be amended so as to set forth his true name.¹

(2) Appearance or Personal Service

Under some statutes supplementary proceedings may be maintained only where the judgment was rendered on the judgment debtor's appearance or on personal or substituted service of the summons on him.

To entitle a judgment creditor to maintain a proceeding supplementary to execution under some statutes the judgment on which execution has been issued must have been rendered on the judgment debtor's appearance or personal service of the summons on him,² or substituted service of the summons on him in accordance with a particular section of the statute.³ The substituted service referred to is permitted only in certain cases on "a domestic corporation, other than a municipal corporation, a joint-stock or other unincorporated association or a natural person, residing within the state."⁴ These requirements are jurisdictional and submission to examination does not waive the right to urge the objection.⁵ The requirement of service is, of course, inapplicable where the judgment on which the proceedings are founded is against plaintiff in the original action.⁶

Service on one of joint debtors. Under some statutory provisions, a judgment against joint debtors, rendered on personal service on one, will authorize the proceedings as to the joint property.⁷

(3) Amount

The judgment must be for a sum not less than the jurisdictional amount fixed by the statute.

To authorize supplementary proceedings the judgment must in all cases be for a sum not less than the jurisdictional amount fixed by the statute;⁸ but where there is no statutory provision to the contrary, and the amount of the judgment is sufficient to constitute it a lien on real estate,⁹ the costs are properly added to the amount of the judgment in determining the amount thereof.¹⁰

§ 361. — Execution and Return

a. Execution

b. Return

a. Execution

Generally, unless the statute has dispensed with the requirement, or unless the judgment debtor is insolvent, the issuance of a legal and valid execution is a condition precedent to a resort to supplementary proceedings.

Generally, unless the statute has dispensed with the requirement,¹¹ or unless the judgment debtor is insolvent,¹² the issuance of an execution is a condition precedent to a resort to supplementary proceedings,¹³ and it is necessary that the execution be issued in a bona fide attempt to find and levy on property which can be reached,¹⁴ since the remedy is given only where the debtor has no known property liable to execution,¹⁵ and it clearly appears that the creditor cannot collect his judgment by means of ordinary process.¹⁶

Sufficiency. The execution must have issued out of a court of record, and one capable of enforcing its own judgments.¹⁷ It must be a legal and valid execution¹⁸ executed in accordance with the mandate of the court,¹⁹ and effective to reach all the property of the judgment debtor, real as well as personal.²⁰ In some jurisdictions, however, an execution against personal property alone is sufficient.²¹ Supplementary proceedings cannot be based on an execution which is utterly void,²² but if the execution is merely defective for informality or irregularity, such as can be amended on motion, the defects will be disregarded and the proceedings will not be affected.²³

The execution must be issued to the proper county.²⁴ Generally it is provided by statute that the execution must have issued either to the county where the debtor has a place for the regular transaction of business,²⁵ or to a county where he resides,²⁶ or, if a nonresident, to the county where the judgment roll or a transcript of the judgment is filed.²⁷ However, under some statutes an execution is sufficient where it is issued to the sheriff of the county in which the court rendering the judgment has residence, it not being required that execution should also issue in the county of defendant's residence.²⁸

A bona fide return of execution unsatisfied in whole or in part is a prerequisite to the maintenance of supplementary proceedings under some, although not other, statutes. Unless false on its face, a return is conclusive in supplementary proceedings.

In determining whether a return of execution is a condition precedent to the maintenance of supplementary proceedings, regard must first be had for the terms of the governing statute.²⁹ Under some statutes, which are applicable where the judgment creditor has knowledge of property belonging to the defendant, but which he has been unable to locate or have levied on under the execution, an order for examination may be obtained after the issuance of execution and before its return.³⁰ Under other statutes, which apply generally where the judgment creditor has no knowledge of the existence of any property of the defendant subject to levy under execution, an order for examination may be secured only after execution is returned.³¹ Where the statute requires a return of the execution, or where the proceeding is based on a particular provision of the statute which requires a return as a condition precedent, a return unsatisfied in whole or in part is necessary,³² and the objection that there was no such return is jurisdictional and not waived by appearance and submission to examination.³³ The omissions or mistakes of the clerk in filing the return of the execution do not vitiate the supplementary proceedings.³⁴

Sufficiency. The return on the execution must be sufficient to show that the creditor has exhausted his legal remedy,³⁵ and that the officer making such return was authorized by law to make it.³⁶ Under some statutes a return nulla bona is sufficient;³⁷ but under other statutes the return must show an exhaustion of the remedy by execution against all the property of the judgment debtor, real as well as personal.³⁸ Ordinarily a return of execution unsatisfied is sufficient,³⁹ although another outstanding execution has not been returned.⁴⁰ If the action is against persons jointly liable on contract, but summons is served on only a part, an execution issued against the joint property of all the defendants and returned unsatisfied is a sufficient exhaustion of the remedy at law.⁴¹ However, a return of execution issued against persons jointly liable is insufficient as a basis for supplementary proceedings where it shows on its face that it was served on one person only.⁴² A defect in the return which is not prejudicial cannot be relied on after examination.⁴³

Time and good faith. The creditor is not bound to wait until the expiration of the time allowed by law for the execution to run, but may institute proceedings immediately on the return of the execution unsatisfied.⁴⁴ The creditor's remedy by execution must be really exhausted by permitting the officer to take the usual course. If there is collusion, or the return is made prematurely, pursuant to the creditor's instructions and without any real attempt to effect a levy, the proceedings cannot be sustained.⁴⁵ In other words, there must be a bona fide attempt to find leviable property,⁴⁶ but if there is such an attempt, although unsuccessful, the mere fact that the premature return was made at the request of the creditor will not invalidate the proceedings.⁴⁷ The debtor may in good faith facilitate proceedings against himself.⁴⁸

Conclusiveness. The return unsatisfied in whole or in part is conclusive until set aside by a direct motion in the action; it cannot be attacked or impeached in supplementary proceedings,⁴⁹ unless it is shown to be false on its face.⁵⁰

§ 362. Right to, and Grounds for, Examination of Third Persons

In most states where supplementary proceedings are authorized, persons indebted to, or having property of, the judgment debtor may be compelled to submit to examination in respect thereof.

In some states the statute authorizing examination is by its terms limited to an examination of the judgment debtor;⁵¹ and the only way, if any, of proceeding against third parties, is by an action, where such remedy is appropriate.⁵² However, in most states where supplementary proceedings are authorized, the right exists to compel persons indebted to, or having property of, the judgment debtor to submit to an examination in respect thereof,⁵³ where the proper procedure for procuring such an examination, considered infra §§ 363-365, is followed. The right may be exercised either before or after the return of execution.⁵⁴ It is not affected by a provision that no action can be maintained to obtain a discovery in aid of another action,⁵⁵ or by a claim by the third person of ownership of the property in question,⁵⁶ or by a denial of possession of property of the debtor or the existence of an indebtedness,⁵⁷ or by the fact that the debt of the third person is not yet payable,⁵⁸ nor will the right be precluded by an attachment of the debtor's property.⁵⁹ While, as appears supra § 349, a third party order does not ordinarily reach moneys or property not owned by, or due to, the judgment debtor at the time of the commencement of the proceedings, it has nevertheless been held that a statute providing for supplementary proceedings against third parties, since it is remedial, should not be so narrowly construed as to prevent the examination of a third party who is about to receive moneys belonging to a judgment debtor.⁶⁰ There is no right to the examination unless the case is within the terms of the statute authorizing it,⁶¹ and, even where it is, the granting or refusal of the application has been held to rest in the sound discretion of the trial judge.⁶² The third party's objection that the judgment on which the proceeding is based is absolutely void is a valid objection which, if true, prevents the examination.⁶³

Dependency on proceedings against judgment debtor or other third persons. In some jurisdictions the proceedings against a third party must be in connection with the proceedings against the judgment debtor who must be made a party.⁶⁴ In other jurisdictions proceedings for the examination of third persons are distinct proceedings from those authorizing the debtor's examination and are not dependent on the institution of proceedings against the latter or his examination.⁶⁵ The right to the examination exists even after the conclusion of the examination of the judgment debtor,⁶⁶ but it is held in these jurisdictions that an order cannot be issued for the examination of a third party while he is under subpoena as a witness in proceedings against the judgment debtor,⁶⁷ or after he has been examined fully as a witness in such a proceeding against the judgment debtor,⁶⁸ or after the judg-

Validity of statute

New York statute providing for examination of third parties believed to have property belonging to judgment debtor on proof by affidavit or subpoena in proceedings supplementary to execution was held not unconstitutional as allowing uncontrolled examination into affairs of any one whom judgment creditor might select, since examination is conducted before judge or referee, who is to keep examination within bounds and exclude prying into irrelevant matters.—Capital Co. v. Fox, C.C.A.N.Y., 85 F.2d 97, 106 A.L.R. 376, affirming, D.C., 15 F.Supp. 677.

Liberal construction

The statute providing for examination of third party who has property of, or is indebted to, judgment debtor should be construed in favor of a policy of aiding a judgment creditor in the discovery of assets of a judgment debtor.—Draco Realty Corporation v. Krapp, 24 N.Y.S.2d 173, 175 Misc. 589.

"Property or other means"

(1) Knowledge of a judgment debtor's address is not knowledge of "property" or "other means" of the judgment debtor, so as to subject a corporation having such knowledge to a third party examination directed solely to the disclosure of such address.—Schwartz' Estate v. Dunish-tock, 25 N.Y.S.2d 742, 175 Misc. 860.

(2) A deposit made pursuant to statute by a judgment debtor with a public utility corporation to secure payment of bills for utility service was not "property" of the debtor within the statute, such as would authorize examining the corporation as a witness in supplementary proceedings.—Schwartz' Estate v. Dunish-tock, supra.

ment creditor has brought an action to set aside the transfer of property by a judgment debtor to a third person.⁶⁹ If sufficient property has been discovered by the examination of third persons an order directing the examination of another person will be vacated as unnecessary.⁷⁰

Prior appointment of receiver. After the appointment of a receiver, it has been held in New York that a third party order cannot be granted, on the theory that title to the debtor's personalty vests in the receiver, including that possessed by third persons,⁷¹ although there is authority to the contrary.⁷²

Dependency on information sought. A third party order will not be granted merely to aid a fishing expedition.⁷³

What third parties. Where an examination of a third party is sought, the proceeding may be instituted against the wife of the judgment debtor,⁷⁴ his assignee,⁷⁵ a corporation,⁷⁶ the treasurer of a joint stock company,⁷⁷ the representative of an estate in which the judgment debtor is believed to have an interest,⁷⁸ an executor holding a legacy belonging to the debtor,⁷⁹ the custodian of property attached in the action,⁸⁰ or persons holding assets of a corporate debtor or indebted thereto.⁸¹ Under one statute it has been held that a municipal body cannot be proceeded against as to its indebtedness to the execution debtor;⁸² but under another it has been held that a municipal corporation is subject to a third party order directing its examination respecting its indebtedness to the judgment debtor for salary or wages.⁸³ An instrumentality of the United States government has been held not subject to supplementary proceedings as a third party, in the absence of an intent to make it so in the statute creating it.⁸⁴ While it has been held that a municipal officer having funds belonging to the municipality may be examined at the instance of a creditor of the corporation,⁸⁵ this has been denied as to money which he holds for the corporation in its public or municipal, as distinguished from its private, capacity.⁸⁶ A receiver of the debtor cannot be examined,⁸⁷ nor can a receiver of a foreign corporation claimed to owe money to the judgment debtor.⁸⁸ An examination of a third person as to property in custodia legis is not authorized.⁸⁹

§ 363. Proceedings to Procure Order for Examination

fectuate the right to examine the judgment debtor or third persons.⁹⁰ Requirements of notice of the institution of proceedings to procure an examination are considered infra § 364, and affidavits or other papers by which the proceedings are instituted, as well as subsequent pleadings, are considered infra § 365. Irregularities in the proceedings on which an order for examination is based may be waived by submitting to examination.⁹¹

§ 364. — Notice

In the absence of a statutory requirement, it is generally unnecessary to give notice to a judgment debtor of an application for an order for his or a third party's examination, although it has been considered to be the better practice to do so.

As a general rule, in the absence of a statutory requirement, notice need not be given to a judgment debtor of an application for an order for his examination⁹² or for the examination of a third person;⁹³ but, as appears infra § 366 c (1), it is sometimes provided by statute that, where an order for the examination of a third person is granted, the judge may, in his discretion, require notice of the subsequent proceedings to be given to the judgment debtor. An order requiring a judgment debtor to submit to a second examination may be granted ex parte;⁹⁴ but a creditor who has permitted the proceedings to drop after examining the debtor, and who has not adjourned or extended the proceedings, cannot thereafter take the testimony of a witness, without notice to the debtor.⁹⁵ It would seem to be the better practice in all cases that notice should be given,⁹⁶ and that an opportunity to show that the judgment has been paid, or to establish any other satisfaction or defense arising since the judgment was perfected, be thus afforded to the debtor.⁹⁷ Where, under the practice discussed infra § 366, an order is dispensed with by the issuance of a subpoena pursuant to statute, there is obviously no occasion to give the person served any notice of an application for an order.⁹⁸ A statute requiring as a condition precedent to the commencement of proceedings in aid of execution the sending of a demand to the judgment debtor is complied with by sending such a demand by registered mail, and it is not necessary that the debtor receive it.⁹⁹

(1) Necessity

The necessity of showing the requisite facts by affidavit or its equivalent depends on local statute, and in some instances is made to turn on whether the execution has or has not been returned.

As a condition to the issuance of an order of examination some statutes expressly require proof of the requisite facts by affidavit or other competent evidence, not only where the proceedings are instituted before the return of the execution, but also where they are instituted after the return.¹ In other states the statutes, while requiring an affidavit as a condition precedent to the institution of supplementary proceedings before the return of the execution,² are silent as to its necessity where the proceedings are instituted after the return, and the decisions are in conflict as to the necessity of an affidavit where the proceedings are so instituted, some holding that no affidavit is necessary,³ while others hold that proof of the requisite facts by affidavit or otherwise is required by implication.⁴ Where the statute requires proof by affidavit or other competent evidence, it is not essential that all the jurisdictional facts required to be shown be contained in the affidavit, it being sufficient if some of such facts are established by other competent evidence.⁵ In a few states the proceedings are instituted by a complaint⁶ or verified petition,⁷ which, however, in its nature, purpose, and contents corresponds with the affidavit required in other states; and it has been held that a verified petition will take the place of an affidavit required by the statute.⁸ Under a statute allowing, as a substitute for the procuring of an order, the issuance by the judgment creditor's attorney of a subpoena to a third party believed to have property of the judgment debtor, no supporting affidavit is required, although the subpoena is supported by a declaration of the attorney's belief.⁹

For supplemental order. Where a proper order is not obeyed and the proceedings are continued and defendant is brought into court, a supplemental order again directing discovery may be made without the filing of a new petition.¹⁰

Unless the statute otherwise provides, the affidavit may be made by the judgment creditor, his attorney, or agent.

Generally the affidavit may be made by the owner of the judgment, his attorney, or agent for collection of the judgment;¹¹ but where the statute expressly requires the affidavit to be made by the judgment creditor it cannot be made by his agent.¹²

(3) Sufficiency

- (a) In general
- (b) Showing authority to institute
- (c) Reference to judgment
- (d) Reference to execution
- (e) Reference to property of debtor
- (f) For third-party order
- (g) For second order or examination

(a) In General

The affidavit must comply with statutory requirements, and generally should state facts and not conclusions, should state the sources of information and belief on which allegations are based, and should not state the grounds in the alternative.

As will hereinafter appear, the necessary contents of the affidavit are governed to some extent, at least in most of the states, by the question whether the examination sought is that of the judgment debtor or of a third party, and also whether the application is after or before the return of the execution. There are certain rules, however, generally applicable to all such affidavits, such as that the affidavit should not state in the alternative the grounds on which it is based,¹³ and that allegations on information and belief are not sufficient unless the sources of affiant's information and belief are stated, in order that the court may judge of their sufficiency.¹⁴ Statements in affidavits will be presumed to have been made on personal knowledge

Distinguished from showing of authority to institute

(1) Where the papers for an order in supplementary proceedings for the examination of a judgment debtor are indorsed by attorney for judgment creditor, authority to institute the proceedings is presumed, and supporting affidavit may be made by managing clerk in office of attorney for judgment creditor, for under such circumstances, as long as the required facts appear, it is immaterial who makes the supporting affidavit.—In re Weil, 197 N.Y.S. 884, 119 Misc. 627.

23 C.J. p 845 note 60.

Defect not jurisdictional

An order for supplementary proceedings, to which the statute declares a judgment creditor entitled, on proof by affidavit, or other competent written evidence of certain facts, is not void because the affidavit on information and belief does not state the sources of information and belief, the defect not being jurisdictional, but one which could be cured or waived.—Boyd v. Hildebrandt, 185 N.Y.S. 235.

Verification on belief held to authorize order for discovery, but not unless stated to have been made on information and belief, or unless it appears affirmatively and by fair inference that they could not have been made on personal knowledge.¹⁵ The affidavits must comply with the statutory requirements,¹⁶ and if two or more are filed as separate applications each must be sufficient in itself.¹⁷ The affidavit must state facts and not mere conclusions,¹⁸ and it is not always sufficient to follow the language of the statute.¹⁹ The nature of the relief sought need not be stated,²⁰ and if the affidavit is presented in a court of inferior jurisdiction it need not state that it is a court of record.²¹ Surplusage may be disregarded.²² In some states it is held that defective statements in the affidavit may be cured by reference to the record on the theory that the court takes judicial notice thereof.²³

Entitling. The affidavit should be entitled in the court in which the proceedings are instituted,²⁴ but, if it sufficiently refers to the proceeding, it will not be invalidated by a defective title.²⁵

Indorsement. Noncompliance with a rule requiring the indorsement with the name and address of plaintiff's attorney of all papers required to be filed is a mere irregularity which may be disregarded.²⁶

Reference to prior applications. While it is the usual practice for the affidavit to state that no previous application has been made for the order,²⁷

such an allegation is not essential,²⁸ except where required by a statute or rule of court,²⁹ and in any event its omission is a mere irregularity not entitling a party to a dismissal of the proceedings.³⁰

(b) Showing Authority to Institute

Where the moving affidavit is made by one other than the judgment creditor, it must show the authority of the affiant to institute the proceeding.

If the affidavit is made by one other than the judgment creditor, it must show authority to act for him, so that the application will show on its face that the proceeding was authorized by the owner of the judgment,³¹ except, it has been held, where the affidavit is made by the attorney for the judgment creditor.³² Thus an assignee of the judgment must show his right to institute the proceeding,³³ as must an attorney who claims a lien on the judgment.³⁴ Where the judgment creditor is dead, his personal representatives seeking to enforce the judgment through these proceedings must show their right to do so.³⁵ If the affidavit does not show the authority of the affiant to make it, and it is made by one other than the judgment creditor or his attorney, the subsequent approval or adoption thereof by the judgment creditor is ineffective, since the question, on motion to vacate the order, is as to the authority of the judge making the order when the papers first came before him.³⁶

(c) Reference to Judgment

Ordinarily the affidavit should show the recovery of a valid judgment capable of supporting supplementary proceedings, and that the judgment remains unpaid in whole or in part.

The affidavit should affirmatively show the recovery of a judgment,³⁷ except where the record in the action is a part of the proceedings so that the court will take judicial notice thereof,³⁸ and should contain a sufficient description of the judgment to show that it is capable of being made the basis of supplementary proceedings.³⁹ The affidavit should describe the judgment with substantial accuracy,⁴⁰ show the court in which it was recovered,⁴¹ and the party in whose favor it was rendered.⁴² Where the docketing or filing of a transcript of the judgment is necessary, as where the judgment is that of a justice of the peace, the docketing or filing must be alleged;⁴³ but such an allegation need not be made where a docketing or the filing of a transcript is not necessary, as where a judgment of a court of record is sought to be enforced in the county where rendered.⁴⁴ Allegations of this kind may be aided by the presumption of proper and regular performance of official duty.⁴⁵ Under a statute in effect so providing, it must be stated that the judgment was rendered on defendant's appearance or personal or substituted service of summons on him,⁴⁶ unless such facts appear by the judgment roll referred to in the affidavit.⁴⁷

The amount of the judgment should be stated,⁴⁸ and the affidavit should show that it was for an amount authorizing the examination;⁴⁹ but the affidavit need not show that the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction,⁵⁰ unless the court was one of limited or inferior jurisdiction.⁵¹ The affidavit must allege that the judgment is unpaid in whole or in part;⁵² and if the execution has been returned partly unsatisfied the affidavit must contain a statement showing the amount due on the judgment.⁵³ A misstatement in the affidavit of the date of the entry of the judgment is not fatal.⁵⁴

(d) Reference to Execution

As a general rule the affidavit should show the proper issuance of an execution, and, unless the application is made under a statute authorizing examination before the return, should show the return of the execution partly or wholly unsatisfied.

The regular issuance of an execution on the judgment against the property of the judgment debtor and its return unsatisfied in whole or in part must be appropriately shown,⁵⁵ unless the proceeding is authorized before return of execution, in which case, of course, no showing as to a return is necessary;⁵⁶ but the affidavit before the return of the execution should show that the execution is in the hands of the sheriff.⁵⁷ It is sometimes held that where the proceeding is in the court out of which the execution issued, its issuance need not be alleged as the court will take judicial notice thereof.⁵⁸ The affi-

Not necessarily by affidavit

davit must show that the execution was issued within the time required by statute;⁵⁹ but a misstatement of the date of issuance is not a jurisdictional defect and may be disregarded.⁶⁰ It must be shown by the affidavit or substitute therefor that the execution was issued to the proper county;⁶¹ that the execution was one against property;⁶² that it issued out of a court of record;⁶³ and, where a return is necessary, that the execution was returned within the time limited for the institution of the proceeding.⁶⁴ Where the proceedings cannot be instituted until an execution has been issued either to the county where the judgment debtor has a place of business, or if a resident to the county where he resides, or if a nonresident to the county where the judgment roll or transcript of the judgment is filed, it follows that, if the judgment debtor is a resident, the affidavit must state his residence or his place of business.⁶⁵ An allegation in the alternative as to residence or place of business is insufficient,⁶⁶ as is an allegation as to place of business in person "or" by agent.⁶⁷ The allegation should refer to the time of instituting the proceedings rather than the time the execution was issued.⁶⁸

Aider by presumption. Particular allegations of the issuance and return of an execution are sometimes held sufficient by resorting to presumptions of regularity.⁶⁹

(e) Reference to Property of Debtor

The statutes vary as respects the allegation of the existence or nonexistence of property of the judgment debtor, where the execution has been returned unsatisfied. If the application is made before the return, the affidavit is sometimes required to allege that the debtor unjustly refuses to apply his property to the satisfaction of the judgment.

Because of the different statutory provisions in the several states, the decisions are not uniform as to the necessity for alleging the existence or nonexistence of property belonging to the debtor, where the proceedings are instituted after the return of execution. In some states an allegation that the judgment debtor has property has been held not necessary.⁷⁰ In other states it is necessary and sufficient to state a belief that the judgment debtor has property subject to execution;⁷¹ and the property need not be specified or described in detail.⁷² In still other states it is necessary to allege the want of known property liable to execution.⁷³

Affidavit before return of execution. If the application is before the return of the execution, it is necessary, under the statutes in some of the states, to allege that the judgment debtor has property which he unjustly refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment.⁷⁴ The facts and circumstances showing the refusal to be unjust must be stated,⁷⁵ although it has been held that an affidavit in the language of the statute is sufficient, where supported by proof of the omitted facts.⁷⁶ Some courts hold that no demand on the debtor to apply his property in satisfaction of the judgment is necessary or need be shown,⁷⁷ while other courts hold that such a demand and noncompliance therewith must be shown.⁷⁸ Whatever other allegations respecting the property of the judgment debtor are

(f) For Third-Party Order

An affidavit for a third-party order must conform substantially to the statute, and must allege either that the third party is indebted to, or that he has property of, the judgment debtor, in a sufficient amount to justify the order.

To reach the funds of the judgment debtor in the hands of third parties, the affidavit must conform substantially to the requirements of the statute.⁸⁰ An affidavit for an order of examination of a third party must, in addition to the requirements of affidavits in general, considered in the preceding subdivisions of this section state that such third person is indebted to the judgment debtor in an amount over and above the amount specified in the statute,⁸¹ or that he has in his possession or under his control property, of the amount specified in the statute, where there is such a specification, belonging to the judgment debtor.⁸² In some jurisdictions it must be alleged that the debtor has no other property subject to execution from which the execution in question could be satisfied in whole or part.⁸³ It is not necessary to present positive proof of the indebtedness of the third person, or his possession of property of the debtor, but it is only necessary that the proof should be sufficient to satisfy the judge to whom application is made.⁸⁴ The allegations may be made on information and belief,⁸⁵ or at least an order based on an affidavit made on information and belief is effective until vacated;⁸⁶ but in such case the sources of the information and the grounds of the belief should be stated.⁸⁷ A positive statement in an affidavit made by the managing clerk of the plaintiff's attorney will be presumed to be made on personal knowledge.⁸⁸ It is not necessary, unless the statute so requires, to allege that an execution has been returned unsatisfied,⁸⁹ and a de-

Where corporation is indebted to debtor

Order in supplementary proceedings directing assistant cashier of bank to show cause why he should not turn over to judgment creditor money in bank alleged to belong to judgment debtor, held void, in view of Code Civ.Proc. § 717, where neither order nor affidavit on which it was founded showed that any other debtor of judgment debtor than bank was sought to be brought before court, or that assistant cashier was "officer or member" of bank, within §§ 717 and 719.—Liberty Bank v. An order requiring president and general manager of corporation to be examined before a special master concerning any moneys, capital stock, bonds, or other assets which corporation owed to judgment debtor, was not an abuse of discretion, where petition for examination showed that execution had been returned nulla bona, and examination of judgment debtor was barred by judgment debtor's illness, and petition alleged on information and belief that judgment debtor was a stockholder, and that corporation was indebted to judgment debtor, and trial judge permitted petitioners to supplement petition by introducing evidence in support of petition.—Bilrite Bldg. Co. v. Adams, 7 S.E.2d 857, 193 S.C. 142.

Constructive possession of debtor's property

Where third party did not offer proof to negative judgment creditor's allegation that the third party, as attorney for judgment debtor, had received or was about to receive money belonging to the judgment debtor, judgment creditor's allegation was sufficient to support order requiring third party to submit to examination in accordance with the civil practice act, since, if the third party was about to receive money of the judgment debtor, he had "constructive possession" of the money within the meaning of the act.—In re Lindenwald Bottling Corporation, 23 N.Y. mand for payment or delivery of possession need not be shown.⁹⁰

Alternative allegations. An affidavit that a third person has property of the debtor in excess of the statutory amount or is indebted to him beyond such amount, although in the language of the statute, is bad because in the alternative,⁹¹ and an allegation that the third person has property of the debtor "as receiver or individually" is insufficient.⁹²

Counter affidavits. The third person cannot prevent an order for his examination by submitting an affidavit asserting himself to be the owner of the property in question and stating the circumstances under which the transfer took place.⁹³

(g) For Second Order or Examination

An affidavit for a second order or examination must allege the facts necessary to warrant such order or examination.

An affidavit is generally necessary to obtain a second examination,⁹⁴ except where the second examination is merely a continuance of the first.⁹⁵ The affidavit must show the facts with regard to the former proceeding and its status,⁹⁶ but failure so to do is a mere irregularity,⁹⁷ and an omission in this respect may be supplied by amendment.⁹⁸ The affidavit must state that the judgment is unpaid.⁹⁹ In addition the affidavit must specifically show the acquisition of property by the debtor since the former examination, that an alias execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied, or that new facts justifying a new order have come to the knowledge of the applicant.¹ If several examinations within a short time of one another have recently taken place, then facts should be shown from which it may be inferred that the judgment creditor will obtain useful information,² and that the examination is not being used as a club to enforce settlement of claims which the debtor is without property to pay.³ The affidavit is insufficient where it merely alleges newly acquired property without stating what it is, or whether it is applicable to the payment of the judgment.⁴ It is not sufficient to allege after-acquired property on information and belief without stating the source of the information or the grounds of the belief.⁵ Conversely, the affidavit is sufficient in this respect where it shows grounds for a belief that the debtor has acquired property since his former examination.⁶ An application for a second order on the ground of nonservice of the prior one must positively aver that the prior one was not served.⁷

(4) Objections and Waiver

Irregularities in affidavits may be waived or cured by failure to object or submission to examination, but jurisdictional defects cannot be so waived or cured.

Generally an order for examination based on a defective affidavit, where the defect is a mere irregularity is valid until vacated.⁸ Such defects may be cured by amendment,⁹ and they are likewise cured by the appearance and examination of the judgment debtor without objection;¹⁰ but jurisdictional defects in the affidavit render an order based thereon void,¹¹ and the mere appearance and the examination of the judgment debtor without objection will not confer jurisdiction.¹² Thus appearance and examination will not cure the failure to show the regular issuance of the execution.¹³ Objections to the sufficiency of the preliminary affidavit should, as a rule, be tested by a motion to vacate the original order or motion to set aside the proceedings.¹⁴

(5) Filing

Under some circumstances the filing of the affidavits on which the order is based may be required.

In some states, after the satisfaction of the judgment and discontinuance of the proceedings, and subsequent to procuring an order to examine a third party, the debtor may compel the creditor to file the affidavits on which it was granted.¹⁵ That the affidavit may tend to incriminate the party by whom it was presented will not justify a refusal.¹⁶ Irregularity, consisting in the failure to file, before the report of the referee is filed, an affidavit to procure the examination of the judgment debtor, is waived by obedience to the order and submission to examination without objection.¹⁷

b. Subsequent Pleadings

Ordinarily there is no occasion or necessity for any pleadings subsequent to the application, except, perhaps, for an objection to the application by way of demurrer.

Under a statute providing that all proceedings under an act relating to supplementary proceedings, after an order has been made requiring parties to appear and answer, shall be summary, without further pleadings, all pleadings subsequent to the complaint or affidavit to procure the order are unnecessary.¹⁸ Thus, under such a statute, no answers are contemplated.¹⁹ Where a demurrer to the application for a third party order was filed, it was held to admit the truth of the allegations therein.²⁰

§ 366. Order for Examination

- a. In general
- b. Title
- c. Contents

a. In General

Where all the necessary facts are shown the judge ordinarily has no discretion to refuse an order for examination, but the granting of a second order is discretionary. In some jurisdictions an examination may be procured by process other than an order.

It is generally held that the judge has no discretion to refuse the order where the facts required by the statute are properly shown.²¹ He is without the right to insist on additional facts or to impose other or further terms as a condition of its issuance.²² A second order will not be granted as of course, but only in the sound discretion of the judge²³ on a sufficient showing by affidavit.²⁴ An order is necessary, and a voluntary appearance and submission to examination confers no jurisdiction.²⁵

A finding by the trial court, from the evidence before it, of the requisite facts is deemed necessary under some statutes before the order may issue.²⁶

Filing. In New York, under statutory provisions, the judgment debtor is entitled to an order granting his motion to compel the attorney for the judgment creditor to file an order against a third party for examination.²⁷

Process other than order. In some states there are provisions for procuring an examination in supplementary proceedings otherwise than by an order. Thus there are provisions for the issuance of a summons in a proper case by the clerk of the court, directing the person named to appear at the time stated for examination.²⁸ Under a New York statute designed to make the collection of judgments more effective, an optional method is provided under which the attorney for the judgment creditor may issue a subpoena within two years from the recovery of the judgment, requiring the appearance of the judgment debtor, a third party or a witness for examination concerning the means of the debtor for paying the judgment.²⁹

Where the proceedings are not considered part of the original action, the order should not be entitled in the original action, but rather as an order in a special proceeding.

Where supplementary proceedings are held not to be part of the original action, the order should not be entitled in the original action,³⁰ but rather as an order in a special proceeding before a judge out of court.³¹ It is held that where the order is entitled in the action it will be vacated;³² but there is authority in the same jurisdiction to the effect that jurisdiction will not be lost because the order is improperly entitled,³³ and that where the order is made by the judge of a court other than that out of which the execution issued it is properly entitled as of the latter court.³⁴ A mere clerical error in the title of the order, which despite such error

clearly identifies the action, does not invalidate the order.³⁵

(1) In General

The order must conform to the statute and should recite the jurisdictional facts on which it is based. It should confine the inquiry to its proper sphere and may make proper directions for notice and service. A subpoena served in lieu of an order must conform to the statute.

Of course the order must comply with the statute.³⁶ It seems that it is the better practice for the order to recite the jurisdictional facts on which it is based,³⁷ and when all the necessary facts to constitute it a regular and valid order are recited it will be so deemed until attacked by a direct proceeding and the contrary is made to appear.³⁸ To justify an order before the execution is returned, it is held in some states that the order must be specific as to the property which it is alleged the judgment defendant unjustly refuses to apply toward the satisfaction of the judgment. It must describe such property in some way so that defendant may know how to answer concerning it.³⁹

If the order is for the examination of a third party, notice of the proceedings is often required by the order to be given to the judgment debtor.⁴⁰

A new statutory summons in proceedings supplemental to execution is necessary to invest court with jurisdiction of the person of defendant, the original summons on which judgment was obtained being insufficient for such purpose.—Hammond v. District Court of Eighth Judicial Dist. of New Mexico, supra.

Separate proceeding against witness

Supplementary proceedings by way of subpoena may be instituted by service of the subpoena against either the judgment debtor or a third party, but the examination of a witness must be predicated on prior proceedings against the debtor or a third party; in other words, while there may be simultaneous or separate "examinations" of debtor, third party, and witness, there can be no separate and independent "proceeding" against the latter.—Daniels v. 40. N.Y.—Pommerantz v. Bloom, 65 N.Y.S. 671, 32 Misc. 754.

Such provision is authorized by a statute providing that the judge, in his discretion, may require notice to be given.⁴¹ An order made without requiring notice of it to be given the judgment debtor cannot be disregarded, but it may be vacated by the judge who made it.⁴² Sometimes other conditions are imposed, such as the filing of an additional affidavit to obviate defects in the moving papers.⁴³

Directing service on corporation. An order served on a corporation, its agent for the service of process, and several officers, directing them to appear for examination and produce certain books and documents was sufficient, as against a contention that the order did not direct the corporation through some officer designated therein to comply with the terms of the order;⁴⁴ but, where a judgment was obtained against the treasurer of the county committee of a political party, subpoenas directed to the committee as judgment debtor and served on successor officers not named therein were invalid, and not merely informal or irregular.⁴⁵ An order directing the assistant cashier of a bank to show cause why he should not turn over money in the bank alleged to belong to the judgment debtor was void, where neither the order nor the affidavit on which it was predicated showed that the assistant cashier was an "officer or member" of the corporation as required by statute.⁴⁶

Scope of examination ordered. The order should confine the inquiry to its proper sphere;⁴⁷ and, at least in the case of a third party, should not be so broad as to permit the judgment creditor to embark on a "fishing expedition."⁴⁸ While, under a particular statute, it has been held to be the general rule that an order for a second examination should limit the examination to the period after the commencement of the first proceeding,⁴⁹ it has also been held to be within the court's discretion not so to limit it,⁵⁰ and even, in some circumstances, to constitute error to do so.⁵¹

Subpœna. A subpœna served under a statute providing for such process in certain instances in lieu of an order must comply with the statute.⁵²

(2) Before Whom Returnable

The court, judge, or referee, as the case may be, before whom the order may be made returnable should be designated with reasonable particularity.

It is essential that the officer before whom the proceedings are made returnable should be designated with reasonable particularity;⁵³ but mere vagueness not amounting to uncertainty will, it has been held, not vitiate the order.⁵⁴ The order may be made returnable before the judge who granted it,⁵⁵ or, at least under some circumstances, before another judge specified in the order,⁵⁶ or before a referee designated in the order.⁵⁷ Where the statute in effect so requires, the order must be returnable before a judge rather than the court.⁵⁸

The subpœna provided for under New York practice provides that the person served shall appear before one of the justices of the court.⁵⁹

(3) Time of Examination

The order should fix a proper time for the appearance of the party served for examination. A summons is void if made returnable in less time than the statute allows.

The order should fix the time when the person whose examination is desired is required to appear for that purpose.⁶⁰ An order returnable on a Sun-

Stated time after service instead of fixed date

An order for the examination of parties in supplementary proceed-day is a nullity and may be disregarded;⁶¹ but an objection to the omission of the year in the copy served, where appearance was ordered on a subsequent day of the same month, is frivolous.⁶² A date for examination other than that fixed by the original order may be appointed on the opening of a default,⁶³ a modification of the order,⁶⁴ denial of a motion to vacate,⁶⁵ or on a reinstatement of the order.⁶⁶

Return date of summons. Where the statute prescribes the service of a summons instead of the issuance of an order, the summons is void and confers no jurisdiction over the person of defendant if it is made returnable in less time than the minimum provided by the statute.⁶⁷

(4) Place of Examination

A proper place, conforming to the statutory provisions, must be designated for the appearance or examination.

The place of appearance or where the examination is to be held must be specified in the order.⁶⁸ Statutes providing that the debtor may be examined only in the county where he resides or has a place for the regular transaction of business, or which otherwise limit the place of examination, must be complied with in the provision of the order fixing the place of examination.⁶⁹ If the debtor removes to another county after the return of execution and before supplementary proceedings are commenced, the order may require him to appear in the latter county.⁷⁰ The place where the examination of a third party is to take place may be ordered without regard to the residence of the judgment debtor.⁷¹

§ 367. — Service

The order must be served seasonably, by and on the proper person, and in a proper manner.

The order must be served on the person to be affected thereby,⁷² in the manner required by statute;⁷³ and the judge issuing the order has no power to dispense with or change the manner of service prescribed by statute.⁷⁴ Where there are no statutes specifically relating thereto, the courts apply general statutes prescribing the mode of serving notices in actions,⁷⁵ or general rules as to the service of other writs and processes.⁷⁶ The service must be timely⁷⁷ and perfected before the return day of the order.⁷⁸ Under some statutes the order must be served personally.⁷⁹ In some jurisdictions

ings may provide for the hearing a certain number of days after service of the order, instead of on a fixed date.—In re Zurich General Accident & Liability Ins. Co., 201 N.Y.S. 390, 121 Misc. 460.

Propriety of orders

(1) Where a statute providing that the debtor may be examined only in the county where he resides or has a place for the regular transaction of business was repealed under circumstances and in a manner which did not indicate that a contrary policy was being adopted, and where the effect of the repeal was to leave the matter of the place of examination to the court's discretion, the judge could exercise his discretion in accordance with the policy and practice before the repeal and direct the examinations to take place within the county of residence or place of business of the judgment debtor.—Franklin Simon & Co. v. Fisher, 233 N.Y.S. 118, 133 Misc. 751.

(2) Order for examination of judgment debtors under a judgment of the city court of New York, such debtors residing at and having place of business in Bronx County, should have provided for examination in Bronx County, although, as to judgments of the municipal court, the statute provides for examination in the county of the creditor's residence or where the judgment was entered.—*Schwartzberg v. Certified copy

A statute providing that service of an order requiring a person to appear at supplementary proceedings and be examined shall be by a certified copy of the original implies certification by the custodian of the papers, and an order directing that the copy might be certified by the attorney of record for plaintiff was improper.—State v. Hall, supra.

it has been held that service may be made on the debtor's attorney,⁸⁰ or by leaving a copy of the order with his wife.⁸¹ Except as to orders issued by certain courts of local and limited jurisdictions,⁸² the order may be served anywhere within the state;⁸³ and it is held that it may even be served without the state.⁸⁴

Third party order. Service of the order for examination on a third party, and appearance in obedience thereto, confers jurisdiction of his person.⁸⁵ Unless the order or the statutes so require, a third party order need not be served on the judgment debtor.⁸⁶ Some statutes, although not providing the mode of service or notification, contemplate that the judgment debtor shall have notice of the examination of witnesses.⁸⁷ Under some statutes, while service of a third party order on the judgment debtor is one of the permissible modes of acquiring a lien on assets subsequently discovered, see infra § 394, a failure so to serve the order does not result in a defect of parties fatal to the proceedings.⁸⁸

Exemptions. A resident is not exempt from service while in attendance on court as a witness⁸⁹ or juror,⁹⁰ but a nonresident is,⁹¹ and so is a legislator during the time in which he is exempt from arrest on civil process.⁹²

Who may serve. Under the statutes of some states, the order may be served by any person⁹³ other than the judgment creditor.⁹⁴ Under the statutes of other states, service may be made by any civil officer qualified to serve process.⁹⁵

Proof of service. The order is not process so as to permit proof of service by a sheriff's certificate.⁹⁶

Objections and waiver thereof. Objections to the service or proof thereof must be presented by motion to set aside the service.⁹⁷ The objections must be raised at the first opportunity; if the judgment debtor appears and submits to examination he thereby waives his right.⁹⁸ An appearance merely to ask an adjournment is held to constitute a waiver.⁹⁹

In proper cases, an order or subpoena for examination may be set aside on motion. A subpoena may be amended so as to remedy any irregularity therein.

On the other hand, the order or subpoena will not be vacated if sufficient grounds for such vacation are not established.¹³ So the fact that an execution, since returned, was outstanding when the order was served,¹⁴ that the execution is irregular or erroneous,¹⁵ that an alias execution on the same judgment is outstanding,¹⁶ that at the time of the return of the execution unsatisfied the debtor was seized in fee of real property,¹⁷ that an appeal from the judgment is pending,¹⁸ or that the judgment was entered in violation of an agreement¹⁹ has been held insufficient to require the vacation of the or-

Third parties

(1) Third parties may have orders vacated on this ground.—Hoford v. Oster, 268 N.Y.S. 227, 149 Misc. 395.

(2) A third party is entitled on motion to have vacated and set aside an order for its examination in proceedings supplementary to execution upon a judgment rendered by default against a nonappearing defendant, if such third party shows such judgment to be void because defendant was a de facto government which could not be called upon to plead its immunity.—*Nankivel v. Evasion of service

In proceeding to compel former husband of judgment debtor to pay alimony to judgment creditor, third party order would be allowed to stand until judgment debtor no longer sought to evade service.—Conlew, Inc. v. Thompson, 289 N.Y.S. 862, 160 Misc. 551.

Grounds not sustained

Subpoenas issued pursuant to statute permitting judgment creditor to issue subpoenas in third party proceedings supplementary to execution could not be vacated on ground that they did not show that persons and corporations whose accounts with subpoenaed third parties, who were stock brokers, were connected with judgment debtor, where subpoenas required third parties to attend and testify only as to property of judgment debtor, and affidavit of judgment creditor submitted on the argument showed that each one of group whose accounts were to be examined were closely connected with judgment debtor.—*Capital Co. v. Defect in subpoena

A defect in subpoena issued in supplementary proceedings in that subpoena was filled out in name of one who at time was no longer a justice of city court was a remediable one under statute providing that no subpoena shall be vacated or quashed nor shall judgment debtor be relieved from compliance therewith because of any informality or irregularity therein notwithstanding judgment debtor's attorney in good faith believed subpoena defective.—*Lincoln Discount Corporation v. tion of an alleged agreement is not clear, and its legality is doubtful.²⁸

Payment or satisfaction of the judgment is a ground for vacation of the order,²⁹ but not where anything remains unpaid on the judgment.³⁰ If payment or satisfaction is denied, the motion to vacate should not be granted;³¹ in such case defendant should be left to pursue his other remedies,³² such as a motion in the original action to have the judgment satisfied of record.³³

A second order of examination may be vacated in a proper case.³⁴ Where the second order was obtained for the failure of the debtor to verify his deposition taken in the original proceedings, it may be vacated on condition that he make the required verification.³⁵ The order should not be set aside merely because some years before the debtor had been exhaustively examined by the same attorney upon a judgment recovered by the same plaintiff, but individually instead of as a personal representative.³⁶

Modification or partial vacation. The order may be amended by extending the time for the debtor's appearance.³⁷ The fact that a severable part of the order is unwarranted does not require the vacation of the order in toto.³⁸ By express statutory provision, a subpoena directing the party served to appear for examination may be amended so as to remedy any irregularity or informality as justice may require.³⁹

A statutory mode of attacking the proceedings is exclusive. A motion to vacate should be seasonably made and notice thereof should be given to interested parties, and the moving affidavits must be sufficient.

If the statute specifies the mode of attacking the proceedings, that mode is exclusive.⁴⁰ Under the express limitations imposed by some statutes, the order may be vacated or modified only by the judge who made it or by the court out of which the execution was issued.⁴¹ A motion to vacate for an irregularity, as distinguished from a jurisdictional defect, is too late when not made until after examination.⁴² The moving affidavits must clearly show the grounds relied on.⁴³ Allegations therein may be such as to remedy defects in the affidavit on which the original order was granted.⁴⁴ If the moving papers are insufficient, it seems that leave to file an additional affidavit may be granted on the hearing of the motion to vacate.⁴⁵ The affidavit on which the motion is based is not necessarily conclusive as to the facts stated therein.⁴⁶ Notice of the motion should be given to interested parties,⁴⁷ including the judgment creditor,⁴⁸ and should point out the error or irregularity complained of,⁴⁹ unless the defect is jurisdictional.⁵⁰ If the proceedings are regular on their face, extrinsic matters cannot be considered.⁵¹ Even if they may be considered, the vacation of the order because of them rests in the sound discretion of the court.⁵² On vacating an order for the examination of a debtor, he may be required to appear for examination on the day named in the original order.⁵³

Procedure for vacating subpoena. While, under the New York practice, only a belief by the creditor's attorney that the third party has property of, or is indebted to, the judgment debtor is necessary to justify his issuing a subpoena, and no proof is required, nevertheless, where the third party moves to vacate the subpoena on the ground that such is not the case, the creditor must come forward with proof from which the court may reasonably infer that it is.⁵⁴

§ 369. Arrest of Debtor and Security for Attendance on Examination

In some states, on proper proof that the judgment debtor has property which he refuses to apply to the judgment and that he is about to depart from the jurisdiction or conceal himself, a warrant for his arrest may issue. After his arrest, an undertaking may be required of him to attend for examination and not to dispose of his property.

By statute in some states, on proof that the judgment debtor has property which he refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment and that he is about to depart from the jurisdiction or conceal himself, the judgment creditor is entitled to the issuance of a warrant of arrest.⁵⁵ Under some statutes the warrant may issue after the order for examination, or independently of such an order,⁵⁶ and may be issued against a nonresident as well as a resident judgment debtor.⁵⁷ The warrant is obtained on an affidavit setting out the facts existence of which, as specified in the statute, entitles the creditor to the summary relief sought.⁵⁸ Under some statutes, allegations on information and belief, without stating the sources thereof, are sufficient;⁵⁹ but under others the sources must be stated.⁶⁰ The affidavit must show that the debtor has property,⁶¹

but it need not specify the property.⁶² The warrant for the arrest may be issued by a judge residing in the same judicial district as the debtor, even though he does not reside in the same county as the debtor,⁶³ or it may be issued by the referee appointed to conduct the examination.⁶⁴ The warrant must contain a recital of the facts conferring jurisdiction on the court to entertain the proceedings, such as the issuance of execution,⁶⁵ and must state its purpose,⁶⁶ and its language must be clear.⁶⁷ On a motion to vacate the warrant, only the irregularities specified in the notice of motion can be availed of.⁶⁸

Bond. After the arrest of the debtor, an undertaking may be required of him to attend for examination and not to dispose of his property.⁶⁹ Bonds not complying with the statute are sometimes held sufficient as common-law bonds.⁷⁰

Effect of vacation of order of examination. Where a warrant is issued after an order of examination has been granted, the subsequent vacation of the order does not vacate the warrant. The judgment creditor may abandon the proceedings instituted by the order, and elect to proceed under the warrant, or he may keep the proceedings under the order alive until his right to proceed under the warrant is established.⁷¹ The judge may, if necessary, direct an adjournment, or if the return day of the order has elapsed, a continuance of the proceedings under the order may be had until after the return of the warrant and a decision thereon.⁷²

Custody and disposition on arrest. Where the statute authorizes the sheriff to arrest the debtor and bring him before the judge, the sheriff has no authority to imprison the debtor in the county jail,

§ 370. Injunction to Restrain Disposition of Property

- a. In general
- b. Effect

a. In General

In a proper case and on a sufficient application, the judgment creditor may procure an order enjoining or restraining the judgment debtor or other proper person from disposing or suffering any disposition of any property or debt which may be the subject of examination, until further direction. Under an appropriate statute, a subpoena requiring attendance for examination may operate as an injunction.

To effectuate the object of the proceedings the creditor may in a proper case procure an injunction restraining the person to whom it is directed from disposing or suffering any disposition of, or interference with, property of the debtor, or any property or debt concerning which any person may be required to be examined, until further direction.⁷⁴ Under some statutes, the power to restrain extends only to parties to the proceedings;⁷⁵ under others the power is not limited to the restraint of the debtor, but extends to property as to which any person may be required to attend and be examined.⁷⁶ A commissioner who has no power to require any person other than defendant to answer concerning property in his hands belonging to defendant is not vested with the power to make a preliminary order restraining such party from disposing of such property.⁷⁷ Some courts hold that, where the indebtedness in question is denied or where the property sought to be reached is claimed adversely, its transfer or disposition may be enjoined,⁷⁸ but other courts hold the contrary.⁷⁹

Application. An injunction order must be based on a sufficient affidavit,⁸⁰ which, unless the statute otherwise requires, may be part of the moving papers constituting the application for the order of examination. It has been held that allegations on information and belief are not sufficient.⁸¹ Notice of the application is ordinarily required by the statute,⁸² and a bond may be required.⁸³ If not required, however, it is not necessary that the judgment creditor give security before taking such order.⁸⁴ Where an application is made in an action in aid of execution, the complaint must show that plaintiff is entitled to judgment.⁸⁵

Order. A valid order made by a court or officer having jurisdiction in the premises is absolutely necessary.⁸⁶ It is usually contained in, and a part of, the order for examination or warrant of arrest.⁸⁷ It should be confined to the property involved in the proceeding.⁸⁸ Irregularity in the or-

Corporate stock

(1) Where levy on corporate stock is imperfect, auxiliary injunction restraining corporation from transferring stock is misuse of power.—Amm v. Amm, 175 A. 186, 117 N.J.Eq. 185.

(2) But a restraint on alienation by judgment debtor of shares of stock which was located in certain bank, and on which there had been a levy, actual or attempted, and

der for examination does not affect a subsequent injunction order.⁸⁹

Subpoena. Under a New York statute, the service of a subpoena on the debtor or a third party requiring his appearance for examination operates as an injunction restraining the transfer or disposition of the judgment debtor's property, provided a copy of the section of the statute so providing is indorsed on the copy of the subpoena served.⁹⁰

Abandonment. The commencement of a creditor's suit will not revive an injunction order granted in supplementary proceedings which have been abandoned.⁹¹

Vacation and modification. Where the injunction order is directed to a third person having possession of the property in question, a motion to vacate it may be made by the judgment debtor,⁹² or by the third person where he or it claims title to the property.⁹³ The validity of the restraining order must be tested by a motion to set it aside, rather than by opposition to a motion to punish for contempt.⁹⁴ Proper grounds being shown therefor, the injunctive provisions of a subpoena in supplementary proceedings may be vacated.⁹⁵ An injunction may be modified in proper cases.⁹⁶

Necessity of indorsing statute as amended

(1) The section of the statute required to be indorsed on the subpoena having been amended, it was held by the city court of New York that service of a subpoena bearing a copy of the section as it read before its amendment was insufficient to make the injunctive provision effective, since the statute was penal as well as remedial and should be strictly construed, and it was further held that by submitting to examination the third party did not waive the defect as to the injunctive provision, since the subpoena was valid in so far as requiring appearance for examination and invalid only as to the injunctive provision.—St. Luke's Hospital v. Godet, 11 N. Y.S.2d 900, 171 Misc. 7.

(2) However, in a subsequent opinion, the appellate term of the supreme court held that, since the amendments involved did not constitute a substantial variation, a subpoena bearing a copy of the section as it read before its amendment contained a valid and enforceable restraint.—Novey v. Novey, 13 N.Y.S. 2d 513, 171 Misc. 672.

Permitting renewal of chattel mortgage

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in modifying provisions of a restraining order prohibiting judgment debtor from disposing of his property other than in transacting his business "in the ordinary course," by permitting debtor to renew a chattel mortgage existing on his property, where it appeared that such renewal was necessary for continued operation of debtor's business,

b. Effect

The injunction operates to restrain the disposition of property of the judgment debtor; it does not and cannot be made to operate against the property of a third person. At a proper time, the restraining provisions may be released or may cease to operate.

The effect of the order obviously is to preclude the party addressed from disposing of or encumbering the property.⁹⁷ The injunction is no justification to the judgment debtor for refusal to comply with a judgment in another action to which the creditor in the supplementary proceedings is a party.⁹⁸ Neither is an injunction order in supplementary proceedings, restraining a third person from paying an indebtedness owing by him to the judgment debtor, a defense to such third person in a suit against him by the judgment debtor to recover the debt.⁹⁹ A party may be bound by an injunction order of which he has knowledge, although imperfect service is made on him;¹ but an injunction not directed to the debtor who had no notice of the supplementary proceedings is not binding on him, although it was served on him.²

A stay of all proceedings until the hearing of a motion to vacate the judgment will not stay the operation of an injunction granted on the supplementary proceeding.³

especially where it appeared that under the procedure followed the security for the judgment would be increased.—Butcher v. Brouwer, supra.

Issuance of bonds

A lodge's issuance of first mortgage bonds and exchange thereof for interim certificates previously issued by it constituted violation of previous court order, enjoining lodge from disposing of any of its property pending supplementary proceedings under judgment against lodge.—C. Hennecke Co. v. Columbia Lodge, No. 11, K. P., 287 N.W. 742, 233 Wis. 24.

3. N.Y.—Woolf v. Jacobs, 36 N.Y. Super. 408.

Property affected. The injunction is not operative as to property of the third person, but is and can be made operative only as to property of the judgment debtor⁴ owned by, earned before, or due him at the time of the order,⁵ or money due or to become due him at such time;⁶ it does not apply to money or property inapplicable to the satisfaction of the judgment,⁷ or to after-acquired property.⁸ So for reasons which are obvious the injunction will not affect the proceeds of exempt property.⁹ An injunction against the disposition of the debtor's property precludes a valid discharge of a note and mortgage owned by the debtor by surrendering the note to the maker and discharging the mortgage.¹⁰

Under the New York statute relating to subpoenas in supplementary proceedings, the injunctive provisions of a subpoena are inapplicable where the effectiveness of any notice of adverse claim is by law conditioned on the commencement of an action, the giving of security, or other condition.¹¹ Thus a third party subpoena served on a bank does not restrain the transfer of a deposit in the name of someone other than the judgment debtor,¹² although the statute has been construed as restraining the transfer of accounts in the judgment debtor's

Advances on future earnings

Where restraining clause in subpoena obtained by judgment creditor in special proceeding supplementary to judgment operated on advances made to judgment debtor against future earnings for personal services, such advances could not be considered as past earnings so as to be exempt from execution, and, to avoid being held in contempt, judgment debtor should have applied to court for order vacating the restraining clause and releasing the fund in whole or in part, in which event the court in entertaining a subsequent application by judgment creditor would not have allowed judgment creditor more than ten per cent of any such advances—St. Luke's Hospital v. Hall, 20 N.Y.S.2d 602.

Alimony

In proceeding to enforce judgment for rent of apartment contracted for by wife while alimony decree of English court was in force, and while wife was enjoying its benefits, court would not vacate injunctive provisions of third-party subpoena directed to bank to which wife's former husband transmitted alimony payments from England, in absence of showing that the alimony included provision for children or some person other than wife—Sutton Studios v. Furness, 23 N.Y.S.2d 593.

Bequest

Seaman's wages

The fact that a judgment against a seaman was for board and lodging of his daughter did not make his wages subject to the restraining provisions of a third-party subpoena, since such a judgment was not an "order by any court regarding the payment by any seaman of any part of his wages for the support of his wife and minor children" within federal statute providing that prohibition against attachment or arrestment of seaman's wages should not interfere with such an order.—Cunningham v. McCullough, 22 N.Y.S.2d 739.

Proceeds of insurance policies

Where payments due under insurer's supplementary contract with

beneficiary were protected against legal process except garnishee execution under civil practice act and legal process directed against surplus beyond sum necessary for education and support, but judgment creditor had not made use of those remedies, beneficiary was entitled to have all payments due under contract freed from injunction contained in order issued in supplementary proceeding by judgment creditor.—Matulka v. Van Roosbroeck, 25 N.Y.S.2d 240, affirmed 25 N.Y.S.2d 247.

Where the judgment creditor serves an order for examination on the judgment debtor and also serves a third-party order and applies for the appointment of a receiver, the third-party order affects property in the hands of the third party acquired by the judgment debtor after service of the order on him, so that, when the receiver is appointed and qualified, he may take the moneys in the hands of the third party and apply them to the satisfaction of the judgment.—*Oriole Textile Co. v. Termination of restraining order. After the debtor has been examined and found to have no nonexempt assets, it is proper to enter an order releasing the restraining order,¹⁴ and it has been held that, even where no such order is entered, the debtor is justified as treating the restraining order as terminated after the lapse of a considerable time after such examination.¹⁵ Where the statute so provides, the restraining provisions in a third party order remain in force for a period specified in the statute.¹⁶ The operation of an order restraining a third person from disposing of property until further order in the premises ceases on the making of an order appointing a receiver.¹⁷

§ 371. Proceedings on Examination

The examination in supplementary proceedings is largely governed by the rules applicable to the trial of an action. The proceedings may be adjourned.

The examination in supplementary proceedings is largely governed by the rules applicable to the trial of an action.¹⁸ However, there are no pleadings and no formal issue.¹⁹ Appearance and submission to examination without objection waives prior ir-

al,²⁰ but does not waive jurisdictional defects.²¹

Persons injuriously affected by an order made in the course of the proceedings may attack it.²²

Adjournments. A judge or referee may adjourn the proceedings from time to time,²³ in his discretion.²⁴ An adjournment may be had by consent of parties, agreed to by the judge or referee.²⁵ It may be had although the debtor refuses to consent.²⁶ An adjournment is proper where the referee fails to appear on the day set,²⁷ or a party fails to appeal,²⁸ or on account of the ill health or mental condition of the debtor.²⁹ The adjournment may be granted notwithstanding the debtor is enjoined meanwhile from disposing of his property.³⁰ The authority to adjourn should not be abused,³¹ or exercised merely for the purpose of harassing the debtor.³²

The proceedings cannot be adjourned indefinitely,³³ even though the debtor consents.³⁴ The proceedings will lapse if they are irregularly adjourned,³⁵ as where they are adjourned without date,³⁶ and they cannot thereafter be revived without notice to the debtor.³⁷

Revival of proceedings

Service of order in supplementary proceedings revived proceedings which had lapsed on notice to judgment debtor.—Otten v. Stromeyer, 239 N.Y.S. 593, 228 App.Div. 360.

Property affected. The injunction is not operative as to property of the third person, but is and can be made operative only as to property of the judgment debtor⁴ owned by, earned before, or due him at the time of the order,⁵ or money due or to become due him at such time;⁶ it does not apply to money or property inapplicable to the satisfaction of the judgment,⁷ or to after-acquired property.⁸ So for reasons which are obvious the injunction will not affect the proceeds of exempt property.⁹ An injunction against the disposition of the debtor's property precludes a valid discharge of a note and mortgage owned by the debtor by surren-

dering the note to the maker and discharging the mortgage.¹⁰

Under the New York statute relating to subpoenas in supplementary proceedings, the injunctive provisions of a subpoena are inapplicable where the effectiveness of any notice of adverse claim is by law conditioned on the commencement of an action, the giving of security, or other condition.¹¹ Thus a third party subpoena served on a bank does not restrain the transfer of a deposit in the name of someone other than the judgment debtor,¹² although the statute has been construed as restraining the transfer of accounts in the judgment debtor's

23 C.J. p 857 note 47.

Advances on future earnings

Where restraining clause in subpoena obtained by judgment creditor in special proceeding supplementary to judgment operated on advances made to judgment debtor against future earnings for personal services, such advances could not be considered as past earnings so as to be exempt from execution, and, to avoid being held in contempt, judgment debtor should have applied to court for order vacating the restraining clause and releasing the fund in whole or in part, in which event the court in entertaining a subsequent application by judgment creditor would not have allowed judgment creditor more than ten per cent of any such advances.—St. Luke's Hospital v. Hall, 20 N.Y.S.2d 602.

Alimony

In proceeding to enforce judgment for rent of apartment contracted for by wife while alimony decree of English court was in force, and while wife was enjoying its benefits, court would not vacate injunctive provisions of third-party subpoena directed to bank to which wife's former husband transmitted alimony payments from England, in absence of showing that the alimony included provision for children or some person other than wife.—Sutton Studios v. Furness, 23 N.Y.S.2d 593.

Bequest

Judgment creditor was entitled to injunction restraining beneficiary under will from transferring his interest or doing any other act that would prejudice creditor's right to collect judgment out of such bequest.—Mohawk Rubber Co. of New York v. Cronin, 252 N.W. 642, 62 S.D. 249.

Beneficiary legacy

Any amount ultimately payable to residuary legatee is subject to directions of supreme court where alleged judgment creditor of residuary legatee had served on executor third-party order restraining payment of any distributable sums to residuary legatee.—In re Dewint's Will, 292 N. Y.S. 198, 161 Misc. 398.

23 C.J. p 857 note 48.

Seaman's wages

The fact that a judgment against a seaman was for board and lodging of his daughter did not make his wages subject to the restraining provisions of a third-party subpoena, since such a judgment was not an "order by any court regarding the payment by any seaman of any part of his wages for the support of his wife and minor children" within federal statute providing that prohibition against attachment or arrestment of seaman's wages should not interfere with such an order.—Cunningham v. McCullough, 22 N.Y.S.2d 739.

Proceeds of insurance policies

Where payments due under insurer's supplementary contract with

beneficiary were protected against legal process except garnishee execution under civil practice act and legal process directed against surplus beyond sum necessary for education and support, but judgment creditor had not made use of those remedies, beneficiary was entitled to have all payments due under contract freed from injunction contained in order issued in supplementary proceeding by judgment creditor.—Matulka v. Van Roosbroeck, 25 N.Y. S.2d 240, affirmed 25 N.Y.S.2d 247.

Trust property

In supplementary proceedings against judgment debtor, whose only property was income from trust created by one other than herself, appointing receiver of judgment debtor's and trustees' property and enjoining trustees from disposing of such property was error.—Stark v. Baldwin, 23 N.Y.S.2d 730.

Effect of application for receiver

Where the judgment creditor serves an order for examination on the judgment debtor and also serves a third-party order and applies for the appointment of a receiver, the third-party order affects property in the hands of the third party acquired by the judgment debtor after service of the order on him, so that, when the receiver is appointed and qualified, he may take the moneys in the hands of the third party and apply them to the satisfaction of the judgment.—*Orlote Textile Co. v. name.¹³

Termination of restraining order. After the debtor has been examined and found to have no nonexempt assets, it is proper to enter an order releasing the restraining order,¹⁴ and it has been held that, even where no such order is entered, the debtor is justified as treating the restraining order as terminated after the lapse of a considerable time after such examination.¹⁵ Where the statute so provides, the restraining provisions in a third party order remain in force for a period specified in the statute.¹⁶ The operation of an order restraining a third person from disposing of property until further order in the premises ceases on the making of an order appointing a receiver.¹⁷

§ 371. Proceedings on Examination

The examination in supplementary proceedings is largely governed by the rules applicable to the trial of an action. The proceedings may be adjourned.

The examination in supplementary proceedings is largely governed by the rules applicable to the trial of an action.¹⁸ However, there are no pleadings and no formal issue.¹⁹ Appearance and submission to examination without objection waives prior irregularities or defects which are not jurisdictional,²⁰ but does not waive jurisdictional defects.²¹

Persons injuriously affected by an order made in the course of the proceedings may attack it.²²

Adjournments. A judge or referee may adjourn the proceedings from time to time,²³ in his discretion.²⁴ An adjournment may be had by consent of parties, agreed to by the judge or referee.²⁵ It may be had although the debtor refuses to consent.²⁶ An adjournment is proper where the referee fails to appear on the day set,²⁷ or a party fails to appeal,²⁸ or on account of the ill health or mental condition of the debtor.²⁹ The adjournment may be granted notwithstanding the debtor is enjoined meanwhile from disposing of his property.³⁰ The authority to adjourn should not be abused,³¹ or exercised merely for the purpose of harassing the debtor.³²

The proceedings cannot be adjourned indefinitely,³³ even though the debtor consents.³⁴ The proceedings will lapse if they are irregularly adjourned,³⁵ as where they are adjourned without date,³⁶ and they cannot thereafter be revived without notice to the debtor.³⁷

§ 372. — Jurisdiction to Conduct

If the order of reference in supplementary proceedings is not properly served, the referee acquires no jurisdiction to conduct the examination. Jurisdiction is not lost, however, by the arrest of a debtor who has evaded examination or by the absence of the referee at the time and place set for the examination.

If the order of reference in supplementary proceedings is not properly served on the person sought to be examined, the referee acquires no jurisdiction to conduct the examination.³⁸ However, jurisdiction is not lost by the arrest of a debtor who has evaded examination,³⁹ or by the absence of the referee at the time and place set for the examination.⁴⁰ Voluntary submission to examination will constitute a waiver of want of jurisdiction of the person.⁴¹

Jurisdiction and authority of the court or judge in supplementary proceedings generally are discussed supra § 358.

§ 373. — Before Whom Examination Had; Reference

The examination in supplementary proceedings may be had before any officer or tribunal, such as a referee, authorized by law to conduct it.

The examination in supplementary proceedings may be had before any officer or tribunal authorized by law to conduct it.⁴²

Referee. A referee may be appointed to take the testimony,⁴³ especially where it is apparent that a difficult or protracted investigation must ensue.⁴⁴ The appointment may be made with⁴⁵ or without⁴⁶ the consent of the parties, although as a rule it will not be ordered against the wishes of either party.⁴⁷

The appointment of the referee is to be made by a court or judge possessing statutory authority to do so.⁴⁸ In a jurisdiction where statutory provision is made for appointment of a referee by the judge to whom the order for examination is returnable, a substitution or appointment of another referee is to be made by the same judge.⁴⁹ However, under some statutes, a judge acting in lieu of another judge or court exhausts his power when he makes the appointment and is without power to vacate it.⁵⁰ Where an order appointing a referee is still in existence, there is no jurisdiction to issue another order naming another referee.⁵¹ As a matter of practice the creditor may be permitted to name the referee,⁵² and, where the proceeding is on a justice's judgment, it is a recognized practice in some jurisdictions to appoint the justice who rendered the judgment.⁵³ An attorney who holds an unsatisfied judgment against the debtor should not be appointed referee.⁵⁴

Powers and duties of referee. The powers and authority of the referee with reference to the examination are substantially similar to those of the judge when the examination is taken before such officer.⁵⁵ In addition to the general powers of the referee to conduct the examination, procure the attendance of witnesses, and the like, he may when so empowered by the order appointing him summon the debtor to appear before him.⁵⁶ He may also require the creditor to proceed with due diligence,⁵⁷ and entertain an application for a stay of proceedings.⁵⁸ It is his duty to take and not to make the examination, and if he attempts to act in an officious manner and partisan spirit he transcends his duty.⁵⁹

A party voluntarily submitting evidence on a particular issue under an unappealed order of reference cannot later question the power of the referee to determine such issue.⁶⁰

The oath of the referee need only be administered once, and need not be readministered on an adjourned day.⁶¹

Removal of referee. The referee should be unbiased and if he conducts the proceedings otherwise than with perfect fairness, he can be removed on proper application.⁶² He may be removed where he is in the same office with the judgment creditor's attorney,⁶³ unless the judgment debtor has appeared and waived the objection.⁶⁴ However, the mere fact that the referee is a clerk of an attaching creditor is not of itself evidence of fraud warranting removal.⁶⁵

§ 374. — Place of Examination

The examination in supplementary proceedings must be held at the place designated by statute or order of court.

A person ordered to attend for examination in supplementary proceedings should appear at the place designated in the order for examination.⁶⁶ However, an adjournment may be taken to a place other than that designated in the order.⁶⁷

The examination must be held at the place designated by statute.⁶⁸ Under various statutes the judgment debtor may not be required to attend or answer at a place without the county wherein he resides,⁶⁹ or outside the county to which execution against him was issued,⁷⁰ or outside of the county where he resides or has a place of business;⁷¹ other statutes have provided that where the debtor is a nonresident he must be examined in the county where the judgment was rendered,⁷² or that where he is a nonresident and has no place of business in the state, he must be examined in the county in which the judgment roll is filed.⁷³ By answering or submitting to an examination elsewhere without objection, the debtor may waive his right to have it conducted at the place prescribed by statute.⁷⁴ A statute limiting the place of examination to a particular locality has been held not to apply to the examination of witnesses other than the judgment debtor.⁷⁵

The debtor is entitled to be represented by counsel in supplementary proceedings, although participation by counsel in the examination of a witness is not a matter of right.

The debtor is entitled to be represented by counsel in supplementary proceedings.⁷⁶ However, participation by counsel in the examination of a witness is not a matter of right,⁷⁷ but rests in the discretion of the judge or referee.⁷⁸ Although, as appears infra § 378, it has been held that the debtor may be cross-examined in his own behalf, it has also been decided that the party examined is limited to the aid of counsel in framing his answers.⁷⁹

Parties not to be examined cannot appear by counsel,⁸⁰ and where no notice of the examination of a third party has been given to the judgment debtor he cannot so appear;⁸¹ although on examination of a third party who has a remedy against another, the latter may retain counsel to represent the former.⁸²

§ 376. — Witnesses and Attendance Thereof

In supplementary proceedings either party may be examined as a witness in his own behalf, and may examine other witnesses and procure their attendance by process of subpoena.

In supplementary proceedings either party may be examined as a witness in his own behalf, and may produce and examine other witnesses as on the trial of an action.⁸³ Third persons alleged to be in possession of money or property belonging to the judgment debtor, or alleged to be indebted to the judgment debtor, may be called,⁸⁴ but such parties can only be required to answer concerning the alleged indebtedness and as to the fact whether they have property belonging to the judgment debtor.⁸⁵ The judgment debtor need not be examined but his possession of property may be shown entirely by the examination of other witnesses.⁸⁶

Procuring attendance. In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, the attendance of a witness cannot be enforced by order,⁸⁷ but only by the process of subpoena.⁸⁸ A person subpoenaed as a witness is entitled to witness' fees as a condition of appearing and testifying;⁸⁹ but a third party required by order to attend is not so entitled.⁹⁰ If the examination is before a referee, the subpoena should be issued under his hand,⁹¹ and if issued by a judge it must be issued under the hand of the judge before whom the proceeding is pending.⁹² The subpoena must state the place where the person served shall attend.⁹³ A witness cannot be compelled to attend outside the locality prescribed by statute.⁹⁴

A subpoena cannot issue until service of the order for examination or the debtor's voluntary appearance.⁹⁵ After the proceedings have terminated or lapsed, a subpoena should not be issued,⁹⁶ or, if issued, it should be vacated.⁹⁷ However, a sub-

§ 377. — Production of Books and Papers

In supplementary proceedings necessary books and papers may be required to be produced by a subpoena duces tecum or an order of the referee.

In supplementary proceedings the power to compel the attendance of parties and a witness includes the right to compel the production of necessary books and papers by a subpoena duces tecum or an order of the referee,² and this is true where the debtor is a corporation.³ That is, there is power to compel a party or a witness to produce books and papers and to examine them to refresh his memory,⁴ but in the absence of statute there is no power to compel the debtor to produce books and papers for inspection or examination by the creditor.⁵

It is necessary and sufficient that the subpoena, order, or notice, and the service thereof, comply with statutory requirements.⁶ The propriety of the refusal of a witness to produce papers claimed by him to relate to his private affairs is for the court, on a submission of the papers.⁷

§ 378. — Scope and Conduct of Examination

- a. In general
- b. Collateral matters
- c. Disputed ownership or indebtedness
- d. Property transferred

a. In General

The examination in supplementary proceedings should be limited to ascertaining whether there is any property of the judgment debtor which should be applied to the payment of the judgment, but subject to this limitation great liberality should be allowed in the examination.

It is impossible to lay down any particular rule as to the scope of the examination in supplementary proceedings further than that the whole examination must have for its single object to ascertain whether there is any property of the judgment debtor which should be applied to the payment of the judgment,⁸ and the questions propounded must have a tendency to elicit information as to, or discover property belonging to, the judgment debtor and applicable to payment of the judgment.⁹

Great liberality should be allowed in the examination.¹⁰ The extent of the inquiry must be left largely to the good sense and discretion of the officer under whose direction the examination takes place.¹¹ Nevertheless, the judge or referee should not act capriciously or in a partisan spirit,¹² and a general inquiry into the debtor's private affairs is ing for patent is not "property" and therefore he may not be compelled to disclose the nature of his invention.—Rosenthal v. Goldstein, 183 N. Y.S. 582, 112 Misc. 606.

Questions relating to recorded mortgage are within scope of inquiry.—Wilkinson v. Harberson, La.App. 145 So. 28.

Questions beyond scope of inquiry

Judgment debtor, whose stock judgment creditor held as security, could not be questioned as to who owned controlling interest in corporation and value of stock.—Thompson v. Commonwealth, 159 S.E. 98, 156 Va. 1032.

not permissible, in the absence of reasonable or well-founded belief of fraudulent transfer, see § 378 d infra, or concealment of property.¹³ While it has been held that questions relating to property acquired since the institution of the proceedings should not be propounded,¹⁴ it has also been held that the examination may include an investigation of financial transactions by the judgment debtor after the examination has begun.¹⁵ The judgment debtor when called as a witness should be examined the same as any other witness.¹⁶

A second examination by the same creditor should ordinarily be limited to the time since the former examination was had,¹⁷ but it cannot be so limited where the order for examination is general and the former proceedings have been abandoned by consent.¹⁸

Cross-examination. The debtor may be cross-examined in his own behalf,¹⁹ and the creditor may cross-examine and contradict him.²⁰ The debtor may cross-examine other witnesses.²¹

b. Collateral Matters

On an examination in supplementary proceedings collateral matters, such as the merits of the original action and the validity of the judgment or execution, cannot be considered.

On an examination in supplementary proceedings, the merits of the original action cannot be considered,²² nor can the validity of the judgment²³ or execution,²⁴ or, as appears supra, § 361, the truth of the return of the sheriff thereto, be called in question. Neither can the validity of the debtor's discharge as an insolvent be tried or determined in these proceedings.²⁵ The sufficiency of the service of the order for examination cannot be tried before the referee conducting the examination.²⁶

An examination into the affairs of others than the judgment debtor should not be allowed merely on the hope that something may be brought out to enable the creditor to show a connection of the judgment debtor therewith or his interest in the subject matter of the particular questions.²⁷

c. Disputed Ownership or Indebtedness

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing or of consent by the parties interested, ordinarily the court or referee is without jurisdiction in supplementary proceedings to determine the existence of an indebtedness to the judgment debtor which is denied, or the title to property to which a substantial claim is made by third persons.

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing,²⁸ or of consent by the parties interested,²⁹ in supplementary proceedings the court or referee is without

Jurisdiction of nonresident

Court had no jurisdiction to proceed against property adversely claimed by nonresident unless some form of service on nonresident was authorized by statute, even though proceeding was regarded as one in rem and that property was within power or control of the court; and court did not obtain jurisdiction by service of a show cause order on nonresident.—Davis v. Woollen, 71 P. 2d 172, 191 Wash. 379.

Order to adverse claimant to show cause construed

Order requiring third parties claiming adversely to pay judgment or show cause why they should not pay presented prima facie findings which such third parties are required to answer, and on which issues may be made up for jury trial, if jury be demanded by either party, or upon which in default of issues made by pleadings default judgment might be entered and execution issued.—State ex rel. Phoenix Tax Title Corporation v. Viney, 163 So. 57, 120 Fla. 657.

Failure to object

Where at hearing before referee, third party raised objections on the merits but no objection was made to power of referee to try the issues, the parties conferred jurisdiction on trial court to determine disputed questions of fact as to existence of alleged indebtedness.—Powley v. Dorland Bldg. Co., 24 N.E.2d 109, 281 N.Y. 423, reversing 9 N.Y.S.2d 860, jurisdiction to determine the existence of an indebtedness to the judgment debtor which is denied,³⁰ or the title to property to which a substantial claim is made by third persons.³¹ However, this rule must be confined to third persons not parties to the original action, and against whom a trial of ownership in the summary proceeding would be without due process.³² In some jurisdictions, although the matter cannot be determined in the supplementary proceedings, the creditor may nevertheless fully examine a third person as to property claimed by the latter to be his own or as to an indebtedness which is disputed,³³ but this rule is not universally adhered to.³⁴

Jurisdiction to order payment of a debt or delivery of property in dispute is considered infra § 383.

d. Property Transferred

In supplementary proceedings inquiries relating to the bona fides of an assignment or transfer of property by the debtor may be made.

In supplementary proceedings inquiries may be made as to the circumstances attending an assignment or transfer of property by the debtor, for the purpose of ascertaining the bona fides of the transaction.³⁵ If the debtor is examined before return of the execution on the ground that he has property which he unjustly refuses to apply to the judgment, it is proper to inquire as to what has become of the proceeds of property disposed of by him.³⁶ However, a general inquiry into the debtor's private affairs is not permissible, where a reasonable basis for an inquiry to discover a fraudulent transfer of property is not shown.³⁷ A third person who is a witness may be asked concerning transactions of another with the judgment debtor to determine whether the former was merely a dummy to hold title for the judgment debtor.³⁸

Assignment for benefit of creditors. Where it appears that the judgment debtor has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the examination is not necessarily limited to property acquired since the assignment, and it is error so to limit it.³⁹ The assignor may be asked whether in making the assignment he had any intent to defraud his creditors.⁴⁰ It seems, however, that on the examination of an assignee for the benefit of creditors the

§ 379. — Privilege of Party or Witness

A party or witness in supplementary proceedings will be accorded the privileges recognized by law, such as a witness' privilege against self incrimination.

A witness in supplementary proceedings will be accorded only the privileges recognized by law.⁴⁴ In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, the debtor or an ordinary witness is privileged not to answer a question which will incriminate or tend to incriminate him.⁴⁵ Where by statute it is provided that the debtor or a witness shall not be excused from answering on the ground that his answer will tend to convict him of the commission of a fraud or to prove his participation in the disposition of property applicable to the judgment, the witness cannot refuse to answer questions having such a tendency, on the ground of privilege.⁴⁶ However, it is also provided by statute in some states that his answer cannot be used as evidence against him in any criminal prosecution or proceeding,⁴⁷ although it may be used in a civil proceeding.⁴⁸ Under a statute so providing a witness will not be excused from answering proper questions on the ground that he claims the property which is sought to be reached.⁴⁹

In any event, a witness is entitled to refuse to answer questions considered by him to be improper until directed so to do by the person before whom the examination is had.⁵⁰

§ 380. — Form, Correction, and Disposition of Testimony; Filing

The evidence or depositions of witnesses taken at the examination in supplementary proceedings should be reduced to writing, and if correct should ordinarily be subscribed by the witness examined, and filed with the proper officer.

The evidence or depositions of witnesses taken at the examination in supplementary proceedings should be reduced to writing,⁵¹ and if correct should be subscribed by the witness examined.⁵² Corrections or explanations of the testimony should be permitted to be made by the party examined,⁵³ and it is not necessary that a witness should sign the deposition made by him when the effect will be to subject him to a new legal liability.⁵⁴ The validity of an order for the payment of money or delivery of property subsequently made is not affected by a failure of a party or witness to sign his deposition.⁵⁵

Filing. The depositions or testimony as reduced to writing should be filed with the proper officer.⁵⁶

Examination must be filed notwithstanding proceedings are instituted by additional or alternative remedy

Filing may be compelled.⁵⁷ Refusal to file is not justified by objections which have been waived.⁵⁸ A failure to file before the making of an order for the payment of money or delivery of property does not affect the validity of the order.⁵⁹

§ 381. — Reopening

After the conclusion of the debtor's examination in supplementary proceedings a further examination should not be permitted unless special circumstances are shown.

On the conclusion of the examination in supplementary proceedings, it is the duty of the referee to return to the judge the oath administered to him as to the faithful discharge of his duties, with his report and the testimony.⁶² Statutes requiring findings in civil actions do not apply to an examination in supplementary proceedings.⁶³ The findings of the referee are not binding on persons not parties to the proceedings.⁶⁴ Whether the referee's report transcends the scope of the reference can be reviewed only on appeal.⁶⁵

Fees. An application must be made to determine the amount of the referee's fees.⁶⁶

a. In General

In supplementary proceedings if money or property applicable to the judgment is discovered in the possession or under the control of the debtor or any other person, its application to the satisfaction of the judgment ordinarily may be directed, and under a statute so providing the court may, in a proper case, make an order permitting, or requiring, a person indebted to the judgment debtor to pay his debt to a designated person.

In supplementary proceedings if money or property applicable to the judgment is discovered in the possession or under the control of the debtor or any other person, its application to the satisfaction of the judgment ordinarily may be directed by payment or transfer to the sheriff holding the execution, or to a receiver appointed in the proceedings, or in some jurisdictions direct to the creditor,⁶⁷ and un-

by subpoena.—Axinn & Sons Lumber Co. v. Osinski, supra.

Fund in possession of third parties

An order may be made directing third parties to pay a fund in their hands where title to the fund remains in the judgment debtor.—Miller v. Clayton Coffee Pot, 264 N.Y.S. 430, 238 App.Div. 121.

Stay of enforcement of order

Where question whether creditor was authorized to institute supplementary proceedings on a judgment not signed or indexed by clerk had not been squarely passed on by any appellate court, order directing payment of fund to judgment creditor would be stayed until determination was had at appellate term, provided other claimants took necessary steps to perfect appeal.—Edelstein v. Oxman, 13 N.Y.S.2d 95, 171 Misc. 552.

der a statute so providing the court may in a proper case make an order permitting,⁶⁸ or requiring,⁶⁹ a person indebted to the judgment debtor to pay his debt to a person designated by the statute. However, an indebtedness cannot be ordered paid under a statute authorizing an order requiring the delivery of "money" or "property" belonging to, or under the control of, the debtor.⁷⁰ As against a debtor of the judgment debtor, the judgment creditor stands in the shoes of the judgment debtor,⁷¹ and the court will be alert to make no order which might result in a third party having to pay his debt twice.⁷² In the absence of statute, the order cannot be directed to a person or corporation not a party to the proceeding or the action on which it was based,⁷³ or to a person or corporation which has not been ordered to, and has not, appeared for examination;⁷⁴ and in jurisdictions where the statutes do not contemplate the examination of a third person, the order cannot be directed against a third person, even though he has been examined.⁷⁵

The right to make the order will not be lost by the failure of the debtor to appear for examination,⁷⁶ by the fact that the debtor was arrested for evading an examination by leaving the jurisdiction,⁷⁷ or by the institution of an action by the receiver to recover other property;⁷⁸ but it may be lost by laches.⁷⁹ The order cannot require the execution debtor to pay the debt on receipt of money alleged to be due on an order, but in such a case the proper order is to appoint a receiver to collect the claim of the debtor.⁸⁰

Any indebtedness, money, or property within the purview of the statute authorizing orders of this character may be ordered paid or delivered.⁸¹ A

Cash surrender value of insurance or beyond the jurisdiction of the court,⁸⁶ an assignment or conveyance by the judgment debtor of all his rights, title, and interest therein may be directed.

(3) In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that the power of the court in supplementary proceedings is the same as that of a court of chancery on a creditors' bill, and that the judgment debtor's property may be applied in the same manner.—Tomlinson & Webster Mfg. ously transferred by the debtor,⁸⁷ at least where the bona fides of the transfer is not questioned by the creditor.⁸⁸ However, under a statute so providing, the court may in a proper case enter an order voiding a fraudulent transfer and directing a levy on the property fraudulently transferred.⁸⁹

The fact that the debtor has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors does not preclude the order, where the assignee has not obtained possession and has made no claim to the property notwithstanding the lapse of a considerable time.⁹⁰ However, if the order was made after the assignment, and the assignee had no notice of the proceedings, property in the hands of a third person cannot be taken as against the title of the bona fide assignee.⁹¹ Property in the hands of a general assignee which is not subject to levy and sale under an execution cannot be directed to be applied to the judgment on the ground that an execution issued, but not levied, before the assignment was a prior lien.⁹²

Order as discretionary. The making of an order for payment or delivery of property has been held to rest in the discretion of the court.⁹³ Where vested with a discretion in the premises, the court instead of making an order for application may appoint a receiver,⁹⁴ or, where the property may be levied on, leave the creditor to his execution.⁹⁵ The test, it has been held, as to whether a third party order to pay over or deliver is proper, is whether the judgment debtor could maintain an action against the third party for the recovery of the specific debt, credit, or personal property.⁹⁶

Who may make order. The power to make an order for the payment of money or transfer of property in satisfaction or partial satisfaction of the judgment may be vested in the court,⁹⁷ a judge thereof,⁹⁸ or the officer⁹⁹ by whom the examination is conducted. Under a statute so providing, the judge who granted the order for examination may make the order.¹ In some states, a court commissioner is without power to make the order.²

Legislative purpose

The statute was intended to provide a remedy for a creditor where garnishment proceedings could not be invoked or would be inadequate, or to allow judgment creditors, other than the one then collecting on a garnishee execution, to procure some payment on their judgments without waiting for full payment of the judgment on which garnishee execution was then outstanding; and, since it would be contrary to the policy of the state to deprive a man for the benefit of a creditor of income at least sufficient to meet the reasonable requirements for the support and maintenance of himself and his dependents, no such purpose can be imputed to the legislature.—McDonnell v. McDonnell, 24 N.E.2d 134, 281 N.Y. 480, reversing 12 N.Y.S.2d 585, 257 App.Div. 810.

Only judgment creditors are entitled to the remedy.—McDonnell v. McDonnell, supra.

Payments out of "income"

(2) A judgment debtor, earning twenty-two dollars weekly as W.P.A. worker and having wife and two small children, should not be ordered to pay judgment creditor anything.—Dotlea Realty Corporation v. Abrams, 24 N.Y.S.2d 252, 175 Misc. 591.

W.P.A. publicity director may be ordered to pay a reasonable sum.—Boal Floral Co. v. Coyne, 284 N.Y. S. 960, 158 Misc. 13.

Alimony

Where judgment debtor's only income was alimony fixed by decree which did not allocate any part thereof for debtor or her children separately, court was without jurisdiction to allocate any portion thereof for debtor, and, in absence of any other means of allocation, could not compel debtor to make installment payments on judgment.—Rentall Realty Corporation v. Marksville, 11 N.Y.S.2d 121, 170 Misc. 825.

Payments to receiver ordered

Under statute payments may be directed to be made to receiver for application on judgment where court's attention is called to appointment of receiver of judgment debtor's property.—Herlihy v. Watkins, 10 N.Y.S.2d 7, 256 App.Div. 839.

Proof

(2) Judgment debtor must affirmatively show his reasonable requirements after creditor has established a prima facie case showing income or value of services sufficient, under ordinary circumstances, to warrant installment payments, and affidavit of attorney for judgment creditor made on information and belief without statement of source of information or grounds of belief is not sufficient information for proper exercise of discretion of court; but decision should be held in abeyance until judgment debtor could appear and be examined and cross-examined.—Adirondack Furniture Corporation v. Crannell, 5 N.Y.S.2d 840, 167 Misc. 599.

Particular orders

(1) Where judgment debtor's monthly income was approximately thirty-two dollars more than his monthly expenditures, court would require payment of twenty dollars a month.—Bowes v. Perkins, 8 N.Y.S.2d 525, 169 Misc. 624.

judgment debtor is employed by a relative or other person, without salary or compensation, or at a salary or compensation so inadequate as to satisfy the court that such salary or compensation is merely colorable and designed to defraud or impede creditors, the court may direct such debtor to make payments based on a reasonable value of the services rendered by such debtor or upon the debtor's then earning ability.⁷ Proceedings under this statute are to be distinguished from the garnishee process.⁸ The making of an order under the statute is discretionary,⁹ and ordinarily such orders will be granted only as a last resort,¹⁰ if the remedy by ordinary execution or garnishee execution is not available,¹¹ or is not equally effective.¹²

c. Debt or Property in Dispute

Where the indebtedness to the debtor or the ownership of the property in question is in dispute, or a doubt exists as to such ownership, there is no power in supplementary proceedings to direct the application of the money or property to the judgment, unless the parties consent, or unless, under a statute so providing, the adverse claimant is a party to the proceeding.

Where indebtedness to the debtor or the ownership of the property in question is in dispute, or a doubt exists as to such ownership, there is no power in supplementary proceedings to try and determine the conflicting claims, as shown supra § 378 c, or to direct the application of the money or property to the judgment,¹⁵ and this rule is applicable unless

If it is apparent that there is no defense to a claim of set-off against the parties consent,¹⁶ or unless, under a statute so providing, the adverse claimant is a party to the proceeding,¹⁷ but the creditor will be left to his other remedies, such as a plenary action to have the dispute settled.¹⁸

Under the express terms of some statutes the judge may order the application to the judgment of property in the possession or under the control of a third person only where the debtor's right to possession thereof is not substantially disputed.¹⁹ A substantial dispute within the meaning of the statute is a bona fide controversy as distinguished from a mere colorable dispute.²⁰ The determining fact is not the existence of a mere dispute but the apparent substantiality of the dispute,²¹ and the dispute must be based on controverted, as distinguished from conceded, facts.²²

d. Application and Hearing

An order to apply money or property to the judgment can be made only when it is shown that the debtor or third person has money or property so applicable or has control of the same, and is able to comply with it, as well as such other facts as will authorize the exercise of the power conferred on the court or an officer thereof.

An order to apply money or property to the satisfaction of the judgment can be made only when it is satisfactorily shown that the debtor or a third person has money or property so applicable or has control of the same, and is able at the time of the order to comply with it, as well as such other facts as will authorize the exercise of the power conferred on the court or an officer thereof.²³

The procedure on an application for such an order largely depends on applicable statutory provisions.²⁴ An application for an order need not be initiated by an order to show cause,²⁵ unless a statute so provides.²⁶ To warrant the order for payment or delivery of property, all the jurisdictional facts must be proved by direct evidence of the person or persons orally examined.²⁷ If the justice before whom the application is made feels that suffunds belonging to the judgment debtor, it may be summarily allowed but the facts supporting the set-off must be made to appear on the motion papers.—Vaccari v. Maison Paris, 23 N.Y.S.2d 486, 175 Misc. 325.

Allegation and proof of assignment

An application for an order cannot be defeated by averring a prior assignment of the debt to a nonresident assignee unless sufficient evidentiary facts are shown fairly to support the averment that the assignment was made, but, when such showing is made, the issue cannot be tried on such application.—D. L. & W. Coal Co. v. Kenlon, 297 N.Y.S. 126, 164 Misc. 32.

17. Purpose of statute

The statute was intended to supplement the rest of the statute covering supplemental proceedings by providing a complete and adequate relief to judgment creditors of the character formerly available under the common-law procedure known as creditors' bill in equity.—*Junkin v. Performance of condition

Where performance of policy condition requiring surrender of policy was impossible, it was not required to be shown.—Bartley v. Bartley, 8 N.Y.S.2d 327, 255 App.Div. 992.

Finding of concealment

Unless required by statute a finding that defendant is concealing his property is unnecessary, it being sufficient if there is a finding that he has property which he unjustly refuses to apply in satisfaction of the judgment.—Nichols v. Quinn, 147 P. 1103, 94 Kan. 742.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that the judgment debtor had

sufficient facts to justify the granting of the application have not been adduced, he may direct that it be made on motion papers.²⁸

Who may make. The application for the order may be made by a judgment creditor who has assigned his judgment,²⁹ but not by creditors other than those who instituted the proceedings.³⁰

Notice. Statutory provisions and valid orders made pursuant thereto, governing notice of an application for an order to pay over money or deliver property, must be complied with.³¹ In the absence of statute or order of court, however, notice to the judgment debtor,³² to his debtor,³³ or to one claiming a lien³⁴ is unnecessary, although as to property claimed by a third person, such person is entitled to be heard.³⁵ If notice is directed to be given, or is actually given to the judgment debtor, the one served must be a free agent with choice to take advantage of it or ignore it.³⁶

e. Form and Contents of Order

While possession of money or property of the debtor cannot be acquired in supplementary proceedings without a valid order, no particular form of order is required other than that it must be definite and must set out specifically the act to be performed.

Possession of money or property of the debtor cannot be acquired in supplementary proceedings without a valid order.³⁷ No particular form of order is required other than that it must be definite and must set out specifically the act to be performed.³⁸ It should direct payment or delivery to the proper person.³⁹ It should not be so framed as to require the delivery of property of which a manual delivery cannot be made;⁴⁰ or so as unreasonably to compel its transportation to the person designated to receive it;⁴¹ or, where the debtor's claim is payable in a commodity at a stipulated price, as to order the party liable to deliver to the creditor sufficient of the commodity at the agreed price to satisfy the debt.⁴² It is not necessary to recite the amount due on the judgment; that is a matter of record;⁴³ nor is it necessary for the order to state that defendant is able to pay the judgment.⁴⁴

It has been held that the order may be in the alternative requiring the debtor to apply property or in default that an attachment issue;⁴⁵ but it has also been held that an order in the alternative requiring the debtor to pay over money or undergo imprisonment is improper.⁴⁶

An order for the payment of money should state the amount⁴⁷ and should direct a payment of so much only as is necessary to satisfy the debt, together with the costs of the proceedings.⁴⁸ It should not require the payment of money in a spe-

f. Service and Obedience to Order

In supplementary proceedings, after service of the order for payment or delivery of property, coupled with a demand for compliance therewith, it is the duty of the person against whom the order runs to obey it, or to make application to have it modified, and obedience to the order by a third party ordinarily protects him from an action by the judgment debtor, or by an assignee of the judgment debtor who is not a bona fide purchaser, or who has given no notice of the assignment.

In supplementary proceedings, after service of the order for payment or delivery of property, coupled with a demand for compliance therewith,⁵¹ it is the duty of the person against whom the order runs to obey it, or to make application to have it modified.⁵² If the debtor disobeys an order to assign his property to a receiver, a further order of sequestration is unnecessary.⁵³ Disobedience of the order may, as shown infra § 399, constitute contempt, but it does not give rise to a cause of action in favor of the judgment creditor.⁵⁴

Obedience to the order by a third party ordinarily protects him from an action by the judgment debtor,⁵⁵ or by an assignee of the judgment debtor who is not a bona fide purchaser⁵⁶ or who has given no notice of the assignment.⁵⁷ It is not a discharge of the indebtedness as against a transferee from the judgment debtor, in good faith and for a valuable consideration,⁵⁸ of whose rights the person making payment has actual or constructive notice when the payment is made.⁵⁹ It has been held that payment without notice to the judgment debtor is no defense to an action by him,⁶⁰ and that compliance with the order will not defeat the rights of claimant who has had no opportunity of asserting his claim.⁶¹ Neither is the order an adjudication of the fact of liability to the debtor,⁶² or of the extent of such liability.⁶³

Service on the judgment debtor of an order directing a third person indebted to the judgment debtor to pay over the amount of the indebtedness to the judgment creditor has been held unnecessary.⁶⁴

Duties of receiving officer. Ordinarily, money or property received by an officer under an order for its payment or delivery is to be treated as if it had been levied on by virtue of an execution.⁶⁵ The officer cannot apply the money on another execution.⁶⁶ The loss due to a misappropriation of moneys paid to an officer pursuant to an order procured by the creditor falls on the creditor.⁶⁷

g. Objections, Modification, and Setting Aside

laterally, and objections thereto must be taken by a motion addressed to the judge who made it, who may vacate an order improvidently or erroneously made.

An order in supplementary proceedings directing payment or delivery of property, although it may and should be modified in a proper case,⁶⁸ cannot be attacked collaterally.⁶⁹ Objections to the order must be taken by a motion addressed to the judge who made it.⁷⁰ The motion must be made by the person affected by the order.⁷¹ The order cannot be attacked for irregularity in granting the original order for examination.⁷² The validity of an assignment by the debtor cannot be attacked on a motion to vacate an order to turn over property.⁷³ Mere irregularity in the form of the order will not vitiate it,⁷⁴ although an order improvidently or erroneously made may be vacated and the parties placed in statu quo.⁷⁵

The failure of a receiver to file the order appointing him as required by law will not vitiate an order directing delivery of property to the receiver.⁷⁶

§ 384. Actions or Proceedings in Aid of Execution

In some jurisdictions the judgment creditor may in a proper case bring an action or proceeding in aid of the execution or may intervene in a pending action.

In some jurisdictions the judgment creditor may in a proper case bring an action or proceeding in aid of the execution,⁷⁷ or may intervene in a pending action.⁷⁸ In the absence of statute the judgment creditor cannot maintain an action at law against a debtor of the judgment debtor.⁷⁹ Under statutes so providing, where it appears that a third person or corporation is indebted to the judgment debtor,⁸⁰ or where there is a dispute as to a debt or property owing by or in the hands of a third

Nature of proceeding

(1) A "proceeding in aid of execution" is in fact garnishment after judgment and is very similar to a garnishee process.—Bazzoli v. Larson, 178 N.E. 331, 40 Ohio App. 321.

(2) It appeals directly to the equity side of the court which must give ear to any claim based on equitable principles.—Michigan State Industries v. Fischer Hardware Co., 197 N.E. 785, 50 Ohio App. 153.

Order directing opening of safe-deposit box

(1) An order directing a bank leasing a safe-deposit box to open it for levy by sheriff is primarily in direct aid of execution, rather than order in garnishment proceedings, and such order is proper.—O'Connor v. McManus, N.D., 299 N.W. 22.

(2) However, it has also been held that the court cannot require an execution debtor to open a safe deposit box rented by him, to enable the sheriff to seize the contents, although the aid of the court might be secured on proper showing to enforce the sheriff's right to open the box.—Trainer v. Saunders, 113 A. 681, 270 Pa. 451, 19 A.L.R. 861.

Action authorized by statute

80. Nature of action

A judgment creditor's action brought pursuant to the statute is similar to an action by a receiver acting under the control of the court in supplementary proceedings, and the judgment creditor, like a receiver, can maintain the action as against contention that the statute in effect provides for garnishment.—Sherwood v. U. S., C.C.A.N.Y., 112 F.2d 587, certiorari granted U. S. v. Sherwood, 61 S.Ct. 171, 311 U.S. 640, 85 L. Ed. 408, and reversed on other party,⁸¹ the court may authorize an action to be brought against such third party. In an action in aid of execution, as against third persons the judgment creditor ordinarily has no greater rights than the judgment debtor.⁸²

In a judgment creditor's action to reach the judgment debtor's income from a trust fund, the fact that the income is insufficient for the support and maintenance of the debtor has been held not to constitute a valid legal defense.⁸³

Proceedings in aid of execution seeking to reach wages of the debtor may be barred, where the statute so provides, by the appointment of a trustee on the application of the debtor for the pro rata distribution among listed creditors of his wages over the amount exempt to him.⁸⁴

An attachment may be had as a matter of right in an action in aid of execution without the affidavit or bond usually required.⁸⁵

Limitations. An action in aid of execution against the debtor of the judgment debtor is not barred as long as the judgment debtor's right of action is not barred.⁸⁶

Jurisdiction and venue. An action in aid of execution must be brought in the court having jurisdiction thereof.⁸⁷ The statutes relating to the venue of ordinary adversary actions have been held not to apply to a statutory cause of action in aid of execution.⁸⁸

Parties. Under some statutes where the action or proceeding is instituted to reach property held or claimed by a third person or an indebtedness owing by him to the debtor, both such person and the debtor are necessary parties thereto;⁸⁹ but third persons cannot be made defendants for any purpose other than to answer as to any property held by them belonging to the judgment defendant, or as to their indebtedness to him.⁹⁰ Apart from such statutes, it has been held that a bill in aid of execution should include the parties to whom the defendant claims to have sold the property.⁹¹

Where the creditor waives an answer by the debtor, the court may refuse to permit him to file an answer and make new parties.⁹²

Notice to judgment debtor. Notice of the action need not be given the judgment debtor where it is brought under a statute authorizing an action against a third person indebted to, or having the possession or control of money or property of, the debtor and not expressly requiring that notice be given him or that he be made a party.⁹³

Pleadings. The character of the pleadings in an action in aid of execution may be governed by statute.⁹⁴

(1) Under the statutes and practice, formal pleadings, other than the affidavit or verified complaint and demurrers and motions to test the sufficiency thereof, are unnecessary.—Eden v. Everson, 65 Ind. 113.—Beckman Supply Co. v. Newell, 118 N.E. 962, 68 Ind.App. 679.

(2) Where pleadings other than those authorized by statute are filed they may be disregarded.—Beckman Supply Co. v. Newell, supra.

(3) After the making of an order requiring the parties to appear and answer, the proceedings are sum-

The complaint must state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.⁹⁵ It should show at least generally that judgment was recovered by the judgment creditor against the judgment debtor,⁹⁶ and the issuance of an execution thereon to the proper county.⁹⁷ Although there is contrary authority,⁹⁸ it has been held that the complaint should aver that the court made the requisite order permitting the action.⁹⁹ The complaint must also allege that the third party has property of the debtor or is indebted to him,¹ which with other property claimed by him as exempt will exceed the amount exempt by law;² that the judgment debtor holds no property other than that sought to be reached in the hands of such third person subject to execution sufficient to satisfy the judgment;³ that the debtor unjustly refuses to apply the money or property sought to be reached to the satisfaction of the judgment;⁴ the nature of the claim sought to be enforced against the third party;⁵ and if it is sought to establish fraud or a trust relation between the debtor and the third party the necessary facts must be stated.⁶ Plaintiff need not anticipate or negative matters of defense.⁷ If the action is against the judgment debtor, under a statute, for refusing to pay the debt while having property concealed, the complaint need not aver that the action was brought under such statute.⁸ In some jurisdictions, if the creditor seeks to subject a particular claim to the payment of his judgment he should file a verified complaint at first,⁹ or he may compel the debtor to answer under oath and frame his complaint from the information thus obtained.¹⁰ The failure to verify the complaint may be waived by the interposition of an answer to the merits.¹¹

In some jurisdictions a written answer may be waived;¹² and where plaintiff has waived an answer by the debtor the court may refuse to permit him to file one.¹³ Where a written answer is unnecessarily interposed, its sufficiency may be questioned by motion;¹⁴ a demurrer is not required.¹⁵ Indeed, rulings on a demurrer to the answer are immaterial and cannot constitute reversible error.¹⁶ If an answer is filed, it has been held that it must be duly verified or it will be rejected.¹⁷ Likewise it has been held a part of the answer not duly verified may be stricken out.¹⁸ Even sworn denials by the debtor and the third person of any indebtedness between them is not conclusive on plaintiff;¹⁹ the judgment debtor cannot in his pleadings raise the question of the liability of a third person alleged to be indebted to him.²⁰

It has been held that in a proceeding in aid of execution on corporate stock a plea that the stock sought to be reached is worthless and exempt from execution cannot be considered.²¹

Evidence. The burden is on the creditor to establish the facts necessary to warrant relief.²² Thus the burden is on the creditor to show the ex-mary, without further pleadings, and therefore no written answer is necessary.—Carpenter v. Vanscoten, 20 Ind. 50.

The court is not required to make special findings of fact and to state its conclusions of law thereon.⁴⁰ Where a special finding of facts has been made, it will be treated as a general finding only.⁴¹

The judgment must be supported by the evidence,⁴² and must grant appropriate relief.⁴³ A second personal judgment should not be rendered.⁴⁴

rules or statutes relating to receivers in general.⁴⁸

A receiver appointed in proceedings supplementary to execution stands in a position different from that of a receiver in equity⁴⁹ or in bankruptcy.⁵⁰ Thus he is not, except in a technical sense, an officer or instrumentality of the court,⁵¹ and he represents only the judgment debtor, the judgment creditor at whose instance he was appointed, and such other judgment creditors as may have caused the receivership to be extended to their claims.⁵² He is not only the agent or representative of the debtor,⁵³ but he also represents,⁵⁴ and is an instrumentality of,⁵⁵ and a trustee for,⁵⁶ the judgment creditors.

§ 386. — Grounds for and Right to Receivership

- a. In general
- b. Conditions precedent in general
- c. Property applicable to judgment
- d. Absence of other remedies

a. In General

A receiver may be appointed in a proper case, and usually is appointed in such a case as a matter of course, although, in the absence of statutory provision to other effect, the matter is one within the discretion of the court. A receivership is proper as ancillary to an injunction restraining disposition of the debtor's property; to effectuate an order for payment or delivery of property; to permit suit to set aside alleged fraudulent transfers; and to afford a remedy where indebtedness or title is in dispute.

A receiver may be appointed in a proper case, as authorized by statute or otherwise,⁵⁷ and such an appointment is usually a matter of course.⁵⁸ In the absence of statutory provision to other effect, however, the matter is one within the discretion of the court,⁵⁹ and its discretion in this respect is broad,⁶⁰ although of course it must be exercised legally and not arbitrarily.⁶¹

A receivership is proper as ancillary to an injunction to restrain a disposition of the debtor's property;⁶² to give effect to an order in the proceedings requiring the payment of money or delivery of property;⁶³ for the purpose of allowing suit to be brought to set aside alleged fraudulent transfers;⁶⁴ and in order to afford a remedy where an order to pay over or deliver cannot be made because the indebtedness or title is disputed by a third party.⁶⁵ The appointment of a receiver to examine claims of lien creditors and mortgagees to the property, and make recommendations to the court concerning them, is improper;⁶⁶ and it has been said to be questionable whether a receiver of a joint stock association can be appointed in supplementary proceedings.⁶⁷

As between creditors in different proceedings the earlier applicant is presumably entitled to the appointment.⁶⁸

b. Conditions Precedent in General

A receiver will not be appointed unless an execution has duly issued and there have been supplementary proceedings. There is no right to a receiver where the judgment has been paid or satisfied; and a receivership may be refused where it would merely enable the judgment creditor to harass the judgment debtor without likelihood of benefit to the creditor.

There is no right to the appointment of a receiver unless an execution has duly issued,⁶⁹ and obviously a receiver cannot be appointed in supplementary proceedings where no supplementary proceedings have been had.⁷⁰ Also there is no right to a receiver where the judgment has been paid or satisfied;⁷¹ and the court may properly refuse to appoint a receiver where a receivership would merely enable the judgment creditor to harass the judgment debtor without likelihood of benefit to the creditor.⁷²

A receiver may be appointed where, and as a rule will be appointed only where, it appears that the judgment debtor has, or there is reasonable ground to believe that he has, property applicable to the judgment. Property for which an appointment may be proper includes real property, an equity of redemption, rents, and earnings; an appointment for income received under a trust has been held improper.

A receiver of the judgment debtor may be appointed where it appears that he has, or there is reasonable ground to believe that he has, property applicable to the judgment, either in his own hands and under his control or in the possession or under the control of others,⁷³ or even where no property has been discovered,⁷⁴ or where ownership appears but is disclaimed by the debtor⁷⁵ or is asserted by a third person, as noted supra subdivision a of this section, or where the facts raise a strong presumption of property, although the debtor denies it,⁷⁶ or although the debtor denies that the property is of any value,⁷⁷ or where a third person indebted to the judgment debtor has extinguished his indebtedness.⁷⁸ The general practice, however, is not to appoint a receiver unless it appears, or there is reasonable ground to believe, that the judgment debtor has some property applicable to the judgment.⁷⁹ The mere ownership of property does not warrant the appointment of a receiver if the property is exempt⁸⁰ or for any reason not applicable to the satisfaction of the judgment;⁸¹ but a receiver may be appointed where the judgment debtor owns property over and above his exemptions.⁸² A receiver should not be appointed where the debtor has been discharged in bankruptcy.⁸³

Real property. Under some statutes a receiver may be appointed for real as well as personal property of a judgment debtor.⁸⁴

Equity of redemption. An appointment is warranted where the judgment debtor has an equity of redemption in property.⁸⁵

"must" appoint a receiver upon application of the judgment creditor does not require that a receiver be appointed where the only property of the judgment debtor is exempt.—Tosti v. Sbano, 11 N.Y.S.2d 321, 170 Misc. 828.

85. N.Y.—Burr v. Comar, supra.
23 C.J. p 871 note 67 [a].

Rents. A receiver may be appointed to collect rents due or to become due the judgment debtor.⁸⁶

Income from trust. The appointment of a receiver for income to be received by the judgment debtor under a trust created by another has been held improper.⁸⁷

Earnings. A receiver may be appointed for the purpose of securing the conversion of a salary check of the judgment debtor into money.⁸⁸ The appointment of a receiver for the purpose of reducing to possession contingent fees of an attorney as and when earned has been held to be proper,⁸⁹ although there is also authority to the contrary.⁹⁰

d. Absence of Other Remedies

Where other adequate remedies are available to the creditor, a receivership is not a matter of right, and he may be required to pursue such other remedies. The fact that property may be reached by execution has variously been held to preclude and not to preclude appointment of a receiver. A resort to a remedy other than receivership does not necessarily preclude the subsequent appointment of a receiver.

Where other adequate remedies are available to the creditor, a receivership is not a matter of strict right,⁹¹ and he may be required to pursue such other remedies.⁹² It has been held that if the only property disclosed may be reached by execution a receiver cannot be appointed,⁹³ although even in the same jurisdictions there are a number of decisions to the contrary.⁹⁴ The power of appointment is not limited by statutory provisions authorizing an order permitting a third person indebted to the judgment debtor to make payment to the sheriff.⁹⁵ Where a creditor agrees to forbear enforcement of the judgment as long as the debtor performs a covenant to pay, for which the debtor furnishes security, the creditor is entitled to have a receiver appointed on the debtor's failure to perform the covenant, irrespective of whether the security has been exhausted.⁹⁶

If a remedy other than receivership is the only remedy provided by statute, a receiver should not be appointed.⁹⁷

Resort to other remedies. A resort by the creditor to a remedy other than a receivership does not necessarily preclude the subsequent appointment of a receiver.⁹⁸

The pendency of a creditor's suit in a federal court to which the applicant is not a party will not preclude an appointment in the state court.⁹⁹

a. Who May Appoint

As a rule any court or judge who has power to entertain supplementary proceedings may appoint a receiver in supplementary proceedings instituted and pending before it or him.

As a general rule, any court or judge who has power to entertain supplementary proceedings may appoint a receiver in supplementary proceedings instituted and pending before it or him.¹ Conversely, jurisdiction to appoint a receiver is confined, under some statutes at least, to the court or judge before whom the supplementary proceedings were instituted² and to whom the order or warrant is returnable.³ Objections to jurisdiction to appoint a receiver may be waived, however,⁴ as by failure to appeal from the order appointing the receiver.⁵

b. Who May Be Appointed

Any competent person who is a resident of the state may be appointed receiver. The court in making an appointment will consider, however, the relationship of a prospective appointee to either of the parties to the special proceeding.

Any competent person who is a resident of the state may be appointed receiver.⁶ The sheriff is eligible to appointment.⁷ The court in making an appointment will consider, however, the relationship of a prospective appointee to either of the parties to the special proceeding.⁸

A referee may be permitted to nominate a person whom the judge in his discretion may appoint.⁹

Where the appointment of a designated officer of the court may be made only with the written consent of the parties, an appointment made without such consent is, nevertheless, a mere irregularity¹⁰ which cannot be taken advantage of in a collateral proceeding.¹¹

c. Time

Generally a receiver may be appointed at any time after the granting of an order for examination, or after a warrant of arrest granted in place thereof. Appointment before return of the execution has been variously held proper and improper.

A receiver cannot be appointed until after an order for examination or the issuance of a warrant of arrest.¹² Generally, however, the appointment may be made at any time after the granting of an order for the examination of the debtor or any other person.¹³ Thus it may be made on or after the return of the order for examination, and while the proceedings are still pending,¹⁴ during the examination,¹⁵ while the proceedings are pending pursuant to an adjournment,¹⁶ or at the conclusion of the debtor's examination.¹⁷ Under some statutes, however, the appointment is not made until the evidence taken on the examination is placed before the judge.¹⁸ The appointment may be made after a warrant of arrest granted in place of an order for examination,¹⁹ or although the judgment debtor is not himself examined.²⁰

The appointment of a receiver more than ten years after the docketing of the judgment has been held permissible if the supplementary proceeding was instituted within ten years after the return of execution unsatisfied.²¹

Before return of execution. The appointment of a receiver before return of the execution has been variously held proper²² and improper.²³

23. N.Y.—Darrow v. Lee, 16 Abb.Pr. 216.

Before return day of motion for receivership.

An appointment after the return day of the motion for the receivership may be valid where the judge before whom the motion is returnable is out of the county on the return day.²⁴

d. Application

(1) In general

(2) Notice

(1) In General

The judgment creditor on an application for appointment of a receiver must show all the facts which are necessary to warrant or require the appointment, and the judgment debtor should be afforded a full opportunity to be heard.

The judgment creditor on an application for appointment of a receiver must show all the facts which are necessary to warrant or require the appointment.²⁵ Thus it should appear that execution was duly issued on the judgment.²⁶ Where an examination has been had, that fact should appear,²⁷ and in some,²⁸ although not in other,²⁹ jurisdictions it must be shown that property was disclosed or exists.

Intervention by general creditors. General creditors are not required or authorized to intervene in supplementary proceedings in which a receiver is appointed.³⁰

Hearing. The judgment debtor should have a full opportunity to be heard in proceedings for the appointment of a receiver.³¹

(2) Notice

At least where statutes so provide, the judgment debtor and other judgment creditors who have instituted supplementary proceedings or creditor's suits must ordinarily be given notice of an application for appointment of a receiver. The notice should be given within a time and served in a manner prescribed by statute. It may be general in form, but as to the debtor at least must be in writing.

By express provision of some statutes, notice of the application for a receiver must be given the judgment debtor,³² unless the order for examination, or the warrant of arrest in lieu thereof, has been served on him and the appointment is on the return day thereof or at the close of the examination,³³ or unless the judge dispenses with notice in the order of appointment on the ground that the debtor cannot with reasonable diligence be found within the state.³⁴ These rules, however, have been held not to apply in cases where notice has been waived, as by an appearance of an attorney on behalf of the debtor,³⁵ or by a voluntary appearance of the debtor and submission to examination.³⁶

Notice to other judgment creditors who have instituted supplementary proceedings or filed creditor's bills is also expressly required by some statutes.³⁷ Such other creditors are not entitled to a copy of the examination on which the application is based.³⁸ Failure to give notice to other creditors is not prejudicial where by their acts they have waived notice.³⁹

Appointment "upon or after the return day"

A statute authorizing the appointment of a receiver "upon or after the return day" of an order for examination, warrant, or subpoena served on the judgment debtor without further notice to him refers to an application for receiver made during the course of an examination of the judgment debtor before the court, as any other construction would leave the time and place when an application might be made indefinite and the judgment debtor in ignorance of its making.—Universal Film Exchanges v. Austin, 287 N.Y.S. 109, 158 Misc. 935.

Independent application

Even where the examination has not been concluded, an independent application to the court for the appointment of a receiver without notice to the judgment debtor is not proper.—Universal Film Exchanges v. Austin, supra.

34. Wash.—Pappas v. Taylor, 244 P. 390, 138 Wash. 22.
23 C.J. p 873 note 26.

Where receiver could not control property

A refusal to appoint a receiver for the purpose of taking possession or control of particular property of a nonresident debtor is at least within the discretion of the court where there has been no personal notice to the debtor and it does not appear that the receiver could acquire any effective control of the property.—Ulmann v. Thomas, 175 N.E. 192, 255 N.Y. 506, affirming 243 N.Y.S. 771, 229 App.Div. 855, and reargument denied 177 N.E. 156, 256 N.Y. 598.

Time. Where the time for giving notice is prescribed by statute, notice should be given in accordance therewith.⁴⁰ Notice given a few months after the appointment, without obtaining a new order, is insufficient.⁴¹ A creditor in other proceedings is not entitled to the length of notice provided for on motions generally.⁴² A requirement as to the time of notice may be waived, as by an appearance by attorney.⁴³

Form. The notice need not be specific; a general notice will suffice.⁴⁴ Notice to the judgment debtor must be in writing,⁴⁵ but a verbal notice to other judgment creditors has been held sufficient.⁴⁶ A counternotice, on a motion to vacate an order appointing a receiver, that on the hearing the creditor would move for the appointment of another receiver, if defeated on the motion to vacate, is sufficient.⁴⁷

Service of notice on the debtor must, under the statutes of some states, be personal;⁴⁸ service on the attorney of record in the action in which the judgment was recovered has been held not sufficient.⁴⁹ In other states the courts apply general statutes authorizing the leaving of a copy at the residence of the debtor.⁵⁰

The order appointing a receiver should recite the jurisdictional facts authorizing its issuance.⁵¹ It may grant the receiver specific powers,⁵² but it cannot confer on the receiver powers in excess of those prescribed by statute.⁵³ It need not incorporate directions to the receiver which may be embodied in subsequent orders.⁵⁴

An immaterial erroneous designation of the court in the title does not vitiate the order.⁵⁵

Amendment. An error in the order may be corrected by an amendment nunc pro tunc.⁵⁶

(b) Provisions with Respect to Property

A receiver cannot be appointed for only a specified part of the debtor's property. The order may enjoin a disposition of the debtor's property. Under some statutes it should not direct an assignment or conveyance by the debtor or adjudicate disputed rights to property in the hands of a third person.

A receiver cannot be appointed for only a specified part of the debtor's property.⁵⁷ The order may properly except property, however, which is exempt.⁵⁸ A failure to make provisions for exemptions is at most a mere irregularity.⁵⁹

Injunction against disposition. The order may enjoin a disposition of the debtor's property.⁶⁰

Order for payment or delivery. Where by virtue of statute the title of property of the judgment debtor vests in the receiver on the filing of the order of appointment, a provision in the order of appointment requiring the judgment debtor to assign or convey his property to the receiver is unnecessary and improper.⁶¹ However, it has been

Determination of disputed rights. Under some statutes, the order should not adjudicate disputed rights to property in the hands of a third person.⁶³

The order appointing a receiver must be filed as required by statute,⁶⁴ and the appointment is not complete until the order is so filed.⁶⁵ It has been held sufficient to file an order extending the receivership, although the original order of appointment is not filed.⁶⁶

(3) Effect

An order appointing a receiver does not terminate the proceedings or deprive the judge who granted it of further jurisdiction. The appointment does not affect the rights of other creditors or displace or affect existing liens. It also has been held not to preclude the debtor from disposing of his property; but after the appointment strangers to the proceedings deal with him and his property at their own risk.

An order appointing a receiver does not terminate the proceedings,⁶⁷ or deprive the judge who granted the order of further jurisdiction.⁶⁸

The appointment does not affect the rights of other creditors,⁶⁹ or displace or affect existing liens.⁷⁰ It also has been held not to preclude the execution debtor from disposing of his property;⁷¹ but after the appointment strangers to the proceedings deal with the judgment debtor and his property at their own risk,⁷² although they are not precluded from enforcing rights incident to their prior acquisition of his property.⁷³ The debtor cannot, after the appointment and during the receivership, procure the issuance of execution on a judgment recovered by him.⁷⁴

(4) Objections and Setting Aside

An order made by a court or judge authorized to make it and reciting the necessary jurisdictional facts furnishes conclusive evidence of its regularity when questioned collaterally, and can only be set aside for irregularity by a direct proceeding for that purpose. In a number of cases, various questions have been adjudicated relating to the grounds for vacation, who may object, who may vacate or modify, amendment of motion, evidence, conditional vacation, effect of vacation, and waiver, estoppel, and laches.

An order appointing a receiver in supplementary proceedings, made by a court or judge authorized by law to make it, and reciting the facts necessary to give jurisdiction to such court or judge, will furnish conclusive evidence of the regularity of the order when questioned collaterally; it can only be vacated or set aside for irregularity by a direct proceeding brought for that purpose.⁷⁵

A subsequent countermand of the execution will not vitiate the order.⁷⁶

Grounds for vacation. Vacation of an order appointing a receiver is proper where for any reason it has been erroneously granted,⁷⁷ as where personal service of notice of the application for the order has not been made on the judgment debtor.⁷⁸ An order will not be vacated merely because the receiver may have difficulty in getting possession of the debtor's property,⁷⁹ or because of the appointment of a receiver for a corporate creditor which has become insolvent.⁸⁰

risditional objection, may be attacked by a party claiming title adversely to the debtor,⁸¹ or by a junior judgment creditor,⁸² or even by the judgment creditor who procured the appointment,⁸³ mere irregularities in the appointment can be taken advantage of only by the judgment debtor.⁸⁴ Mortgagees, pledgees, and lien creditors of the debtor who were not parties, cannot complain of the appointment of a receiver.⁸⁵

Who may vacate or modify. The order of appointment can be vacated or modified only by the judge who made it.⁸⁶

Amendment of motion. Where a motion to vacate the order contains technical defects, it may be amended by affidavit nunc pro tunc, in response to a direction by the court.⁸⁷

Evidence. In some jurisdictions the order will not be set aside where there was any evidence to justify it.⁸⁸

Conditional vacation. Where the receiver has a claim against only the party who moved for his appointment, the court cannot as a condition to vacating the receivership require the judgment debtor to pay the claim.⁸⁹

Effect of vacation. The vacation of an order of appointment carries with it subsequent orders which depend on the order vacated.⁹⁰

Waiver, estoppel, and laches. The rule is well settled that mere defects or irregularities in the appointment of the receiver or in the prior proceedings may be waived⁹¹ by consenting to the appointment⁹² or by appearing and failing to object when afforded an opportunity.⁹³ The fact that a lien creditor, not a party to the action, consents to the appointment of a receiver, does not estop him however, to object to the possession and control of the property by the receiver.⁹⁴ Laches may preclude a motion to vacate.⁹⁵

f. Bond or Security

Before entering on his duties, the receiver is sometimes required by statute to execute and file a bond conditioned on the faithful performance of his duties, and even in the absence of such a statute the usual and better practice has been said to be to require a bond to be given. Objections for insufficiency of the bond can be urged only by the debtor.

Before entering on his duties, the receiver is sometimes required by statute to execute and file a bond conditioned on the faithful discharge of his duties as receiver,⁹⁶ except in certain cases in which security may be and is dispensed with.⁹⁷ Even in jurisdictions where a bond is not expressly required by statute, the usual and better practice has been said to be to require one to be given.⁹⁸ The appointment is not effective until the security required has been given and filed.⁹⁹

Objections for insufficiency of the bond can be urged only by the debtor¹ in the court which appointed the receiver.² The fact that the bond is not under seal does not render it void,³ but is an irregularity of which only the judgment debtor can take advantage.⁴ Neither the sufficiency of the bond⁵ nor an irregularity in its filing⁶ can be determined in a collateral proceeding.

§ 388. — Extension of Receivership

A receivership in one proceeding may be extended to proceedings subsequently instituted or in which subsequent applications have been made. Notice of an application to extend must be given the judgment debtor, a new bond may be required, and the order of extension must be filed. An extension gives the judgment creditor the same rights as though the receiver had been then appointed on his own application.

Where several proceedings are pending against the same debtor, there should be but one receiver, and, to this end, a receivership in one proceeding may be extended to proceedings subsequently instituted or in which subsequent applications have been made.⁷ A statutory rule to this effect does not render necessary, however, the appointment of the same person as receiver in supplementary proceedings and an action,⁸ especially where the two receiverships will not conflict;⁹ nor does it control appointments of the federal courts.¹⁰ The receiver of all the assets of a partnership, appointed in an action to dissolve the partnership, should not be removed without cause and another person appointed in his stead as receiver in supplementary proceedings.¹¹

A receivership cannot be extended after the death of the judgment debtor.¹²

Notice of application. The judgment debtor must be given notice of an application to extend a receivership.¹³

Bond. On extension of a receivership, a new bond may be required¹⁴ if the existing security is inadequate,¹⁵ but not otherwise.¹⁶

Filing of order. An order extending a receivership must be filed as required by statute.¹⁷

Effect of order. An order extending a receivership, when made, gives to the judgment creditor the same rights as though a receiver had been then appointed on his own application, including the right to apply to the court to control, direct, or remove the receiver, or to subordinate the proceedings in or by which the receiver was appointed to those taken under his judgment.¹⁸ The control and direction of the receiver remain in the court or justice to whose control and direction he was originally subject.¹⁹

Priorities are determined by the dates when the orders of examination were served rather than the date of appointing a receiver, and as between senior and junior creditors the receivership relates back to the commencement of the proceedings on the senior judgment.²⁰ The act of a receiver in leaving property in possession of the debtor does not affect the priority of the creditor at whose instance the receiver was appointed.²¹

§ 389. — Termination of Receivership and Appointment of New Receiver

A payment of the judgment will terminate the receivership except as to proper claims of the receiver. A receivership also will end on the death of the debtor. A receiver may be removed and another person substituted for good cause in the discretion of the court.

A payment of the judgment will terminate a receivership²² except as to proper claims of the receiver.²³ A receivership also will end on the death of the debtor.²⁴

* In jurisdictions where the direction and control of a receiver after his appointment are vested in the court out of which the execution issued rather than in the judge who made the appointment, the receiver can be discharged only by the court out of which the execution issued.²⁵

Assertion after argument of motion

However, after the argument of a motion by the debtor to vacate an order directing an attornment to the receiver, the court will not consider an assertion in a letter from the judgment debtor's attorney that the receivership should fall because of a satisfaction of the judgment prior to the time of the argument of the motion.—Brown v. Guerin, 300 N.Y.S. 209, 164 Misc. 562.

Removal and appointment of new receiver. A receiver may be removed²⁶ and another person substituted²⁷ for good cause in the discretion of the court. He should have notice of the charges against him, and be afforded an opportunity of being heard.²⁸ There should be no removal unless accompanied by the substitution of a qualified person.²⁹

A motion to substitute or appoint a new receiver on the death, resignation, or removal of the receiver originally appointed should be addressed to, and acted on, by the court which is by statute vested with the direction and control of the receiver rather than the judge who made the original appointment.³⁰

A judgment debtor may, by accepting and recognizing as the receiver a person other than the person appointed by the court, preclude himself from questioning the authority of such person.³¹

§ 390. — Control of Receiver

Under some statutes the receiver is subject to the direction and control of the court out of which the execution was issued. Where title to property is disputed, the receiver should apply to the court for instructions.
